CARTER SET TO DRAFT ECONOMIC PACKACE TALKS THIS WEEK

Announcement of Personal Staff Is Expected to Follow Meeting of abmet Members at Resort

MES T. WOOTEN

PERINS GA, Dec 25 With his Cabinet complete and his key advisers appointed. President elect Carter has moved into the second and final segment of his transition calendar, turning his attention new to an economic package for Congress and the selection of a personal staff.

The basic outlines of the economic legislation he has said he will propose soon after his inauguration are expected to be distinct next week in three days of meetings with his Cabinet on St Simons Island, Ga. An announcement of several White House staff appointments is expected later in the week when he returns to his home here.

Those tasks, plus the selection of an international trade negotiator, a decision on who will run the Federal Bureau of Investigation and the filling of nearly 300 second-level posts in the various Government departments are all that remain on Mr. Carter's pre-inaugural agenda. Pleased With Staff

Although the process of naming his Cabinet seemed, at times, something other than the orderly sequence he had predicted, insiders contend that there were no major snags and that the President-elect was generally well pleased with the performance of his transition staff in the Cabinet selection.

He and his aides have declined to discuss specifically the contents of the proposals he will make to Capitol Hill dealing with the country's economy, but it is apparent from public statements and offthe record discussions that some form of a tax cut will be among the recommo dations. Its size and scope have not yet been determined, sources said today, and will not be until a decision is any the total autount of groundit sime

NEW C.I.A. ESTIMATE FINDS SOVIET SEEKS SUPERIORITY IN ARMS

INTELLIGENCE ANALYSIS 'GRIM'

Somber Assessments Are Attributed to Outside Advisers Brought Into Study for First Time

By DAVID BINDER

WASHINGTON, Dec. 25-President elect Carter will receive an intelligence estimate of long-range Soviet strategic intentions next month that raises the question whether the Russians are shifting their objectives from rough parity with United States military forces to superiority.

In reporting this, high-ranking officials of the Central Intelligence Agency said their annual so-called national estimate of Soviet strategic objectives over the next 10 years, just completed, was more somber than any in more than a decade A top-level military intelligence officer who has seen the estimate commented "It was more than somber—it was very grim. 70% of Egyptians Illiterate

Partly because of the inherent difficulties in a dual language system, and partly because of a rapid population growth, 70 percent of the Egyptians are illiterate. With funds for education desperately bort, the number of illiterates in Egyp is growing despite the major program of building schools begun by President Gamal Abdel Nasser after he came to power in 1952.

"We have more children coming to school every year," said Dr. Soad Gadalla, consultant for the National Center for critics are often prevented from reviewing their work.

The effects of illiteracy are felt in such areas as health, where state programs often fail to reach the people, and employment, where there is a burden of unskilled labor.

Under the system of free education begun by President Nasser, primary schools were built in nearly every village and the percentage of children at that level who now attend school bas been more than tripled. Boys Outnumber the Girls

Those who are in school find classes overcrowded—an average of 40 and sometimes 60 children to every class-room, usually one teacher to a class. Three children often share one desk and there are two or even three shifts of only four hours of instruction each.

Fewer girls than boys attend school because of a still common attitude, particulary in rural areas, that women do not need education. By the time of preparatory school, equivalent to jumor high,

Dormitory Was Hit First

One of these dormitories, for male workers, was directly in the path of the jetliner that plowed through it at more than 200 miles an hour. The plane then struck the main factory building and exloded.

The entire second story of the two-story wooden dormitory was sheered off. A wing apparently sideswiped another such formitory next door.

"I was asleep up there," said 21-year-old Virat Kaimok, pointing to the second story, which had collapsed onto the first floor. "I heard an airplane, but I'm used to it by now. I've worked here four years." He pansed frequently while talking as other low-flying jets on their final approaches shrieked across barely a hundred feet above the tops of palm trees.

"I didn't think anything of this plane and the next thing I knew, I was on the ground—down there." He pointed to the rubble of the first floor, "Pieces of wood were covering me; glass, too, and a nail was in my foot." His face, arms and feet were covered with gashes painted with

100 REPORTED DEAD IN RED SEA SINKING

JIDDA, Saudi Arabia, Dec. 25 (AP)—
More than 100 Moslems returning home from a pilgranage died when an Egyptian passenger ship, the Patria, caught fire and sank in the Red Sea, port authorities here said today.

The liner, which sank 50 miles from Jidda, carried 387 passengers and 94 crew members, the Middle East News Agency reported in Cairo. Most were Egyptians returning from a pilgrimage to the Moslem holy cities of Mecca and Medina.

A spokesman for Southeast Asia Ship-

A spokesman for Southeast Asia Shipping Company, local agent for the liner, said rescue ships had brought 86 survivors to Jidda by tonight.

Other survivors were being taken to the Egyptian port of Suez, the spokesman said.

Unofficial estimates of the number of dead ranged from 120 to 170, but a final count will not be possible until all of the rescue ships have reached port, according to the ageocy spokesman.

Soviet Tanker Rescues 201

The Soviet press agency Tass reported from Moscow that a Sowiet tanker, the Lenino, had picked up 201 people. Survivors arriving in Cairo said a half dozen other ships aiding in the rescue efforts included American, Greek, German and Pakistani vessels.

President Anwar el-Sadat sent a special alteraft to fly some of the survivors from Jidda to Cairo.

The Middle East News Agency reported the survivors said the fire had broken out in the engine room.

"A short time later the fire went out of cootrol and the passengers were ordered to jump into the sea where cearby vessels picked them up," the press agency said. "One hour later a series of explosions were beard and the ship went down."

Egyptian military aircraft and Saudi patrol boats and helicopters cootinued searching for any survivors.

The most difficult problem before them to bring the Palestinians into the negotiating process.

A debate is going on inside the P.L.O. Mr. Arafat is known to be willing to go further in meeting with wishes of the Arab governments than are some of the unger members of the leaderships of Al. Fatah and other groups in the P.L.O. aMr. Arafet is head of both Al Fatah and the overall grouping of the PLO. the Saudis, Egyptians and Syrians to give him enough time to persuade his col-

Arafats' strength has been to let them express themselves while preserving unity at the sare time.

During the fighting in the Lebanese civil war, a strong person and bitterness areas between the Syrian leadership and Al Fafah and between Syria and the Democratic Front for the Liberation of Palestine, Al Fatah's closest ally in the P.L.O. The Democratic Front, headed by Nayef Hawatmeh, favors negotiations for a Mid-Hawaimeh, favors negotiations for a Midde East settlement.

As Saiga, the Syrian-controlled guerrilla group, fought on the Syrian side in the Lebanese conflict. In sharp battles with Al Fatah it was driven out of its positions in the camps in Beirut and southern Lebanon. Now it is back.

Syrians Tried to Punish Al Fatah

After the cease-fire, the Syrians were

After the cease-fire, the Syrians were intent oo punishing Al Fatah and started to use As Saiga for this purpose.

Syrian suggestions that all Al Fatah leiders should be purged and that the refugee camps should be almost completely demilitarized led to a possibility that younger members of Al Fatah would be drived to join the rejectionists in spite of Mr. Arafat's appeals for moderation. This would have split the movement and make a bloody showdown in the camps inevitable.

This, informed sources say, is what the new Syriao policy toward Al Fatah is intended to prevent. Syrian and As Saiga action in the camps now is directed action in the camps onw is directed against the "rejectionists," on longer against Al Patah.

An outbreak of clashes in and near the camps this week were between rejectionists and As Saiga, with Al Fatah acting as peacemaker.

Palestinian insiders foresee a slow and uncertain decision-making process within the P.L.O. despite Syria's new tactics.

Although Mr. Arafat is still the leading figure in the movement, these sources say that he has to consult and cajole and listen to contradicting advice, whereas after the guerrilla movement's suppression in Jordan in 1971, be was the uncontested leader.

Institutes say that apart from the hard-core "rejectionists," there is oo real oppoa Palestinian state on the West Bank of the Jordan and in the Gaza Strip, both now under Israeli occupation.

Coun-til Endorsed a Stata

recent meeting in Damascus of the P.L.O's Central Council eodorsed a Pales-tinian state without defining its bound-aries, on the advice of President Assad. The Egyptian-Syrian declaration in Cairo on a united political leadership also called fer such a state.

As Al Fatab officials describe it, the crucial issue on which they are holding their ground against the Syrians is the indeasadence of the proposed state. They reject e federation with Jordan or a larger confederation with Jordan, Syria and perhaps Lebanon. They count on Egyptian and Saudi Arabian support on this stand. This, io turn, bas influenced discussions anors a single Arab delegation to the Geneva conference nn the Middle East. The Arab governments are in favor of such a delegation, but the Palestinians still oppose it out of fear, they say, that it would make it impossible for them to blnck a last-minute move in impnse a lederation on the proposed state.

Despite the continuing controversy some sources predict that a single delegation will eventually be formed. The Arabs, it is believed, want to extract from the Uoited States—co-chairman of the Geneva cooference—a separate invitation to the P.L.O. as a full-fledged participant in the negotiations, in exchange for Arab assurances that there will be only one delegation.

The Palestinians also fight a rearguard action against the United Nations Security Council Resolution of November 1967 as the basis for the negotiations at Geneva. They object to the resulution because it refers to Palestinian "interests" instead of "rights."

But Arab diplomats know that trying to replace or amend the resolution would be certain to stir up a horner's nest. They ok in Secretary General Kurt Waldhelm more than anyone else to find a diplomaic way around this roadblock The most immediate issue on which Syrians and Palestinians still take opposing views involves the weapons that the guerrillas have in the camps.

But the Syrian position is said to have softened. Mr. Assad is reported to bave assured Al Fatah that Egypt and Syria have agreed on a joint program for military training, upgrading of equipment and joint planning in which they want the Palestinians to take part.

This is seen as a Syrian-Egyptian con-cession to the Palestinian view that unless the Arabs combine negotiations with military pressure on Israel, they will bave oo chance of reaching their negotiating objectives.

Pelestinian sources say that Al Fatah has agreed that Palestinian attacks against Israel from southern Lebanon have become politically impossible and that the Palestinians instead must belp anti-Israeli militants creating unrest on the West Bank as a means of keeping Israel under pressure.

Pakistan Wonders Whether Ties To U.S. Will Erode Under Carter

By WILLIAM BORDERS

Pakistanis, who regard themselves as America's staunchest ally in South Asia, and recans the experience loansy. The Pakistanis worriedly.

Takistanis, who regard themselves as the she's planning to go back to where the she's planning to go back to where she served near Bombay and take her son with her," a Pakistani diplomat said worriedly.

Carter with serious apprehension.

"I am really concerned about some of the things he has heen saying," a high-ranking official here declared privately. "We don't want anything to erode our relationship with Washington."

As is often the case in Paldstan, the crux of the matter is India, this country's traditional adversary. Despite the fact that relations between Islamabad and New Delhi have improved dramatically in the last six months, there is still wariness on both sides, and the Pakistanis including antitank missiles, trucks and ammunition. But approval of the sale of the A-7 planes, which India has protested, has been deferred until after Mr. Carter's inauguration.

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan, Dec. 19—The and recalls the experience fondly. "I read to this one.

"Here are the principal areas of concern:

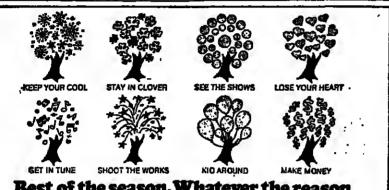

"The fear that the Carter administration may decide not to permit the proposed sale of 110 A-7 light bombers to Pakistan, a deal approved by the Pentaton last month."

"The Pakistanis are well aware of his campaign statements that the United States should stop being "the arms merchant" of the world. And there is a good but of irritation over the American insistant month.

India.

"It goes back to the days of John Kennedy, who seemed to us to be partial to India, as the leader of the third world, and its so-called beacon of democracy," a thoughtful Pakistani explained. "Then, in the 1971 war, it was Nixon who ordered the celebrated tilt toward Pakistan."

There is even nervousness about the fact that Mr. Carter's mother served in the Peace Corps in India during the 1960's like Sandi the Peace Corps in India during the 1960's like Sandi Arabia, might help pay the bill.

Umtali, Gem of a City in Rhodesia, Is Tarnished by the Guerrilla War

UMTALI, Rhodesia, Dec. 25 (Reuters)— Five years ago this town on the Mozambique border was a gem on the map of white Rhodesia, a place where people wanted to live. Today it is the country's only real garrison town. The army, police and air force dominate all aspects of everyday life and "the war" dominates civilian gos-

For Umtalf is Rhodesia's first line of defense in the event of a full-scale thrust by black nationalist guerillas operating from Mozambique. If Umtali fell, the guerrillas would then advance against Salisbury, the capital, some 170 miles.

Already the town has endured a number of rocket and mortar attacks from the other side of the border, but so far only one civilian has been killed.

Schools and Hotels Are Shut The effect of living only three miles from the Mozambique border has had a devastating effect on the economy of Umtali. This month alone, three schools, three hotels and et least five local busi-nesses have announced plans to close. The real estate market became a sick oke long ago. Real estate agents survive because the rentals on their own business premises are so low. One of the latest properties to come on the market is advertised in an Umtali agent's shop window: "For sale: 156 acres farmland, four bedroomed house, good view over Mozambique." The price is $12,000 in Rhodesian currency, or about $21,710 in United States currency.

Ask an agent whether he has sold any bouses letely and back comes the reply: "You must be joking."

But despite the threat that hangs over Umtali with every week's delay in achieving a Rhodesia peace settlement, white morale remains high.

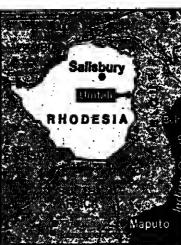

To comprehend why the people are pre-pared to risk both life and property rather than flee to the comparative safety of Salisbury, Umtali's physical surroundings must be taken into account.

A Delight to Evelyn Waugh

Evelyn Waugh once wrote of the town: There is neither snow nor sea, but there is everything else."

He probably would also have disliked the nightly drunken brawls in the down-town bars—now the bangouts of battlehardened young Rhodesian soldiers. But he would still have been breathless et the first sight of Umtali, nestling in a lusb green valley and surrounded by some of the biggest granite mountains in Afri-

Five years ago, Umtali had three major claims to fame. It was the border town for road and rail traffic between Salis bury and the then Portuguese controlled port of Beira, in Mozambique, it was the center of e major tourist area and it was a market town for surrounding citrus fruit and cattle farmers.

It remains a farming center, but the closing of the Mozambique border and the constant clashes between Rhodesian troops and black nationalist guerrillas have dissuaded all but the most stout-hearted tourists from visiting the area. In the bar of one hotel that overlooks the Mozambique border there are several ominous signs of the times.

There's a gun rack for drinkers—both civilian and army—to park their semi-automatic riffes. Spare ammunition is available in case the place is attacked by guerrillas.

And in an upstairs bedroom where guests once gazed over spectacular mountainous country into Mozambique, a powerful telescope now scans the borizon. Few tourists are eager to spend their vacations in army observation posts.

Elderly Rhodesian Couple Wounded In Christmas Attack by Guerrillas

Evelyn Waugh once wrote of the town:
"There is neither snow nor sea, but there is everything else."

SALISBURY, Rhodesia, Dec. 25 (AP)—An elderly white couple were wounded in a Christmas Day ambush by black guervillas in eastern Rhodesia, security chiefs reported today.

A communique from the joint planning staff said the couple's two grandchildren, who were traveling with them in the car, who were traveling with them in the car, were unburt in the attack. Cornelius were unhurt in the attack. Cornelius Flanagen and his wife were treated for bullet wounds.

The army commander, Gen. Peter Walls, said yesterday that attacks by guerrillas on farmhouses, villages and highways were likely to be stepped up over the holiday weekend.

MOZAMBIQUE SYSTEM OF LAW CAPRICIOUS

Thousands Fill the Prisons-Many Are Detained Up to 13 Months Without Being Charged

By JOHN F. BURNS

MAPUTO, Mozambique—In the police beadquarters here, criminal cases are prepared by a two-finger typist. A young man in tight jeans and a clinging sports shirt, be works his way laboriously through the cases, finishing perhaps three or four a day. On a recent afternoon, he had scores that be bad not yet tackled.

Since the revolutionary Frelimo Party took power from the Portuguese 18 months ago, thousands of people have been rounded up, filling tha jails. Three missionaries from the United States were beld for periods of up to 13 months without being charged, and another young American spent 35 days in prison after being arrested while reading a map of Africa on a downtown street.

The Americans were exceptions. With diplomatic assistance, they were freed and placed oo flights home. Others, white and black must wait their turn, in some cases interminably. The two-finger typist is part of a system that seems to rely on vague and arbitrary laws enforced by an army of casually dressed young men, many of them with little or no apparent training in conventional police work.

Correspondent Followed and Detained

A visiting correspondent recently fell afoul of the system in an unusual but revealing way. One evening, while strolling through the streets here with a camera, be was followed, then detained, by two young men oriving a dune buggy. They identified themselves as policemen and insisted that the visitor accompany them to beadquarters.

There, his passport, visa and film were confiscated. The senior of the two policemen, who turned out to be Comrade Djinja a key figure in negotiations over the missionaries, announced that the visitor would be required to remain in the country until a "criminal investigation" into his case bad been completed.

After two days, and hours of waiting in the corridors of the police headquarters, the visitor was confronted by Zeca Ruco, a Portuguese working as an inspec-tor in the criminal investigation division. The iospector identified himself as the driver of an orange dune buggy that the visitor had photographed inadverteotiy in a line of traffic on a suburban street.

"You would be suspicious, too, if some-body took your photograph on the street," he said, in South African-acceoted Englisb. Later, it transpired that he had graduated to the police after several stints spent in fail under the Portuguese, mostly for theft. In South Africa, where he is known as "Gloger Joe," his long record of arrests and escapes has madhim a folk hero.

Capricious and Chaotic

With diplomatic assistance, the visitor eventually retrieved his passport and left the country on the first available flight. But he had seen enough of the legal system to conclude that it is capricious and chaotic. Possibly with reason, after nearly five cecturies of colonialism, the young men who staff it seemed suspicious of all foreigners to the point of animosity. Among resident Westerners, President Samora Machel, the Frelimo guerrilla commander who now leads the country, is credited with having done much to constrain the arbitrariness of the police. He has issued edicts requiring that charges be laid swiftly in all cases except those involving national security, and has visited prisons to review bundreds of cases personally, ordering scores set free. Ha bas also deprived soldiers of the power of arrest.

For the majority of the nine million Mozambicans, more than 80 perceot of them rural, police procedures have little relevance. In the big cities, such as Maputo and Beira, however, they must take care not to arouse the suspicions of the secret police, known by its acrooym, S.N.A.S.P. Its agents, some of them Portuguese, are constantly on the alert for any activity that can be deemed counter-revolutionary.

For Comrade Djinja, there are lesser concerns. During the visitor's sojourn in bis office, one of his subordinates arrived carrying a pair of modish women's shoes, cork wedges with vivid topsides in yellow plastic. A young black woman had been arrested for contravening an edict ban-ning wedges, one of a number of decrees that seek to curb perceived "bourgeois

One decree, since rescinded, banned Western dancing. Bullfighting, another popular pastime, has been banned, and the bullring on the outskirts of Maputo given over to political rallies and mass dancing. But by and large the bourgeois lifestyle in the cities survives, unimpeded by the agents of the new regime.

Relax as Big Crowds Leave

BETHLEHEM, Israeli-occupied West Bank, Dec. 25 (UPI)-Israeli security forces relaxed somewhat today as record crowds began heading home laden with hassocks, pots and other gifts at the end of traditional celebrations marking the birth of Jesus here.

No major incidents marred the observances in this little town in the Judean hills, which was captured by Israel from Jordan in the 1967 war,

American and other foreign pilgrims and tourists joioed Arabs and Israelis in celebrating the joyous holiday with a mixture of carols and prayers, wine and marifuana.

Volcano in Zaire Is Erupting

BUKAVU, Zaire, Dec. 25 (Agence France-Presse) — Nyamulagira volcano, close to tha town of Goma on Lake Kivu bas been erupting since Thursday, according to reports reaching here today. The director of South Virunga National Park's Rumangubo station reported that lava was pouring from a new crater on the southwestern slopes of the 10,000-foot mountain near the Rwanda border.

GUILLOTINE DEBATE RAGING IN FRANCE

Recent Kidnappings and Murders Strengthening Supporters of Death Penalty

PARIS, Dec. 25 (Reuters)—A macabre popular song reflecting a tide of feeling in favor of the death penalty in France has become a sudden smash hit.

Michel Sardou, one of the country's most sophisticated young singers, is glorifying the guillotine with a ballad about a fether whose son has been kidnapped and murdered.

In his song, entitled "Ja Suis Pour" ("I Am For"), he calls for the death penalty but makes it clear that he prefers per-sonal revenge.

Until recently, public revulsion against the guillotine was strong. But a rash of kidnappings, as well as murders of elderly people in various parts of the country has strengthened feeling for keeping the guillotine on the statute books.

Feeling was so strong that French magistrates, who oppose the death penalty, were forced to take a stand on their beliefs.

The Union of French Magistrates voted overwhelmingly against imposing the adeath sentence as abolitionists demonstrated in furce in the streets of Paris.
The strength of the opposition to the guillotine was demonstrated last year when the French Association Against the Death Penalty obtained three million signatures, including thousands of trade union members, on a petition for abolition.

The petition was conveyed to President Valery Giscard d'Estaing by a delegation that included representatives of many segments of society.

Georgie Viennet, a frail but dynamic woman who heads the Association.

Against the Death Penalty, says that the guillntine has never deterred criminals.

"Vinlence must be fought by appropriate means, but we cannot answer a crime by another crime," she said.

Majority Favor Death Penalty

Nevertheless, opinion polls indicate that he majority of French people want to keep eathe guillotine. At least, this is the mood in the country at present.

Global Policy Issues In'80's to Be Topic For a Study Project

By PETER GROSE

For the secund time in the 55-year history of the influential Council on Foreign Relations, it is launching a comprehensive public study of global policy issues in an attempt to focus academic and official thinking on the problems world societies will face in the 1980's.
Some 80 authors from 12 countries have been invited to prepare working papers, which have been discussed and revised in a series of study groups over the past year. Organized into over 30 book-length studies on specific issues, the results are studies on specific issues, the results are to be published by McGraw-Hill and dis-tributed worldwide. The so-called 1980's Project will include major studies on such issues as how to monitor government per-Tormance in defending human rights, op-portunities for cooperation in internation-ral disaster relief, and a wide range of global monetary, trading and security . Announcing the project, Bayless Man-ning, president of the council, said the studies "are in no sense blueprints of studies "are in no sense blueprints of answers to tomorrow's questions; they are primarily invitations to public debate about those questions."

The council, a nonprofit, nonpartisan private organization with nearly 2,000 di-verse members drawn from business, government and the legal and academic professions, normally confines its work to private discussion groups and small lunch or dinner meetings at its New York headquarters on East 68th Street. No headquarters on East 68th Street. No notes or transcripts of the meetings are published, though the council supports the publication of several books a year on specific foreign-policy subjects as well as the quarterly journal Foreign Affairs.

After World War II the council organitived a research project of equivalent After world war if the council organ-ized a research project of equivalent scope, called tha War and Peace Studies, which aimed at concentrating public dis-cussion on the issues of rebuilding the international order. Officers of the coun-cil concluded that world governments a faced a similar fundamental transition period, in which new issues and new policy dilemmas are demanding attention beyond the usual political-military concerns of the past three decades. The 1980's Project is directed by Richard H. Ullman, professor of international affairs at the Woodrow Wilson School of Princeton University. Funding of $1.3 million has been provided by the Ford Foundation, the German Marshall Fund of the adaton, the German Marshall Fund of the United States, the Lilly Endnwment, the Andrew W. Melion Foundation and the Rockefeller Foundation. The unifying theme, according to Mr. Uliman, will be to suggest "desirable, achievable conditions of international relations and specifying policy avenues leading toward such conditions."

Holiday in Japan One More Trial For Post Office

That is because Mr. Kiriyana is a mailman, one of 76,700 Japanese postal employees who in the next seven-days will somehow manage to deliver a stag gening 3.2 billion pieces of mail throughout these islands.

Two-thirds of this vast volume—which equals 29 pieces for each Jepanese—will be delivered on a single day. And it will all be done despite the fact that in Japan there are no street eddresses such as are known in the West. "It's an interesting job." says Mr.

Japan's postal service is among the best in the world, efficiently moving, 14 billion pieces of mail a year among these islands and into and out of the country. Most domestic mail—letters cost 50 yen, or about 16 cents—is delivered overnight, And a sizable part of the problems.

There are fume-filled streets, flat bicycle tires and numerous, but nameless, inhabited alleys and lanes that wander off in all directions. There are increasing numbers of higher-rise apartment houses with giant. Ibbby mailbox complexes that eliminate the warm, daily relationship that Chanes with personally handing eagerly awaited mail to recipients. And even in polite Japan there are unfriendly logs.

"That dog always barks at me he never forgets," said the 28-year-old Mr. Kiriyama as he wheeled up to Kiroshi Sekine's gate the other morning in the Takanawa area of Tokyo, about eight miles south of the Ginza.

There are 80,000 people, 34,040 households and 5,000 businesses in the

For instance, when Hideo Izeks was not home to accept a registered letter.

When Mr. Kiriyama began his job, the most difficult task was learning the geography. Japan's streets, elleys and lanes have no regular pattern or names. Thus, mail addresses become virtual directions.

They begin with the city name, followed by the ward name, followed by the dislocal area name, followed by the district number, the block number, the house number and then, last, the addressee's name. But a house numbered 27, for instance, is not necessarily near the one numbered 26. The house number indicates only that the house was the 27th built in that block.

These days Mr. Kiriyama's bicycle seems awfully heavy under the sheer volume of the holiday mail, most of which has nothing to do with Christmas.

New Year's Is the Big Holiday

The big year-end holiday in Japan is New Year's. There are 300 million New Year's gifts in the mails here-now, many of them perishable foods that will be delivered before they perish. ### Issue of U.F.O.'s Irks Authorities In Soviet Union

By DAVID K. SHIPLER

MOSCOW, Dec. 25-A flying-saucer creze has been flourishing in the Soviet Union. In classrooms and around dinner tables, in huses and offices, it has infected conversation like a ubiquitous germ, sometimes dividing friends into hostile camps of believers and un-

The official press has thrown cold water on rumors that extraterrestrial beings have paid visits.

All this hegan several months ago. As Soviet dissideots circulate clandestine typewritten essaya and statements opposing Government actions, someone began spreading copies of a five-page typed "lecture" attributed to F. Y. Zigel, assistant professor at the Moscow Aviation Institute. It said there had been 300 recorded sightings of unidentified flying objects in the Soviet Union over the years and gave some

It is not clear whether Professor Ziegel, who has written books on astronomy, is actually the author of the lecture, or even whether such a lecture was actually given. The professor himaelf has said nothing in public since tha typed synopsis began circulating.

The typescript included the tantalizing line, "In the U.S.S.R. there exists a ban on all kinds of publications about U.F.O.'s," a remark sure to enhance the document's credibility. In a controlled society in which many people—intellectuals, at least—tend to disbelieve the official press, the typed papers known in Russian as samizdat, meaning unauthorized publications, take on extraordinary verisimilitude. The flying-saucer talk has a certain glitter, not only because it appeals to fantasy hut because it is unapproved. How Rumors Are Gobbled

"Everyhody has to helieve rumors because they are unofficial," a Russian observed, Indeed, the Russian propension ty to gohhle rumors like the first lettuce of spring has a long history. Under the ezars, hy one Muscovite's account, it was customary to start a rumor before a churchbell was cast in the belief that the more widely the rumor was accepted, the better the chance for a successful cast. The expression 'to cast a bell," meaning to start a rumor, remains in the language.

If churchbells were still being cast, Moscow could overfulfill its plan these days. The typed lecture offers several examples of reported U.F.O.'s that are widely believed. Last January, the lecture avers, a U.F.O. hovered over the city of Naichik for 36 hours. A U.F.O. trailed after an airliner from Vorkuta to Omsk. In 1961 a saucer hovered for 45 minutes over a railroad crossing at Golytsino, 28 miles west of Moscow; auto engines stalled and could not he started until the saucer left.

Three weeks ago the Government had evidently had enough. Yeremel Parnov. a Soviet science-fiction writer, appeared in print to denounce the samiz-dat lecture. "Typed in hundreds and thousands of copies, and even copied in handwriting." he wrote in the youth newspaper Komsomolskaya Pravda, "the report lives a life of its own, causing violent arguments in the widest cir-cles: from the youngest schoolhoys to celebrated representatives of the creative intelligentsia. They gossip about the saucers—meaning UF.O.'s—and and palaces of culture."

. Less Than Science Fiction

Seeking to disprove the lecture's contentions point by point, he commented: "Honestly, I would not dare to write a science fiction story on such a threadbare, trivial topic."

The appeal to logic was followed by an appeal to fear. The same newspaper, which is an organ of the Young Communist League, implied that those who spread the flying-saucer stories were somehow subversive, indulging in the "mass culture" of the West, "flirting with soperstitions and religious impulses, manipulated indirectly by the

"The Pentagon is entitled to the patent for the first speculations about flying saucers," the paper declared. "It was in the Pentagon's interests not to assuage but to arouse public opinion. The calculation is very simple here: The frightened Americao will not object to the growth of military allocations."

"Western militarists used the specter of flying saucers to fao the cold war," Komsomolskaya Pravda contended.
"Are not the flying saucers the secret weapon of the Bolsheviks?"

The whole development of the Western saucerology went along the road of antiscientific inventions, in step with other fashionable pseudoscience," it added. "The saucerologists are re-sponsible in a considerable degree for spreading the cult of the supernatural umong part of Western youth. Every pseudoscience is reactionary by its very nature."

な Bukovsky Reports Soviet Reprisals After Protests by Camp Inmates

PARIS Dec. 25 (UPI)—Vladimir K. Bukovsky, the Soviet dissident, says inmates of labor camps and prisons suffer reprisals every time they protest their all conditions.

In an interview in Zurich with the French weekly L'Express, he identified five political prisoaners who he said had become ill from poor treatment. They are Zinovy Antonyuk, Ukrainian sconomist; Bagrat Shakhverdyan, Armenian engineer; Yuri Davydov, Russian scientist; Aleksandr Sergeyenko and Sabriel Superfin, Russian Ilterary critic. Mr. Bukovsky, who spent more than me-third of his life in Soviet detention, was flown to Switzerland and freed one week ago in exchange for Chile's release of Luis Corvalán Lepe the Communist

Seoul Court to Give 18 Major Dissidents Sentences in Appeal-

SEOUL, South Korea, Dec. 25-The Seoul appeals court is expected to hand down a new set of sentences on Wednes-ine day against Kim Dae Jung and 17 other ::

Mr. Kim is a former presidential candidate and a foe of President Park Chung. Hee. He end others, including former President Yun Po Sun, three Roman Catholic priests and a number of Protestant clergymen, signed a manifesto last. March criticizing what they called sup-pression of human rights in South Korea. and asking President Park to resign.

These ections are crimes under a cur-rent emergency decree and are punish-able by a minimum sentence of one year in prison. The decree does not specify any maximum penalty.

In a second round of hearings that has just closed, Mr. Kim and others have denied the prosecution charges that they sought to incite a popular uprising against the Government. The defendants accused the Government of stiffing this press, harassing Christians and directing economic benefits only to the rich few.

Read at Church Service Many of these criticisms were included in the statement that the dissidents signed and that was read during a chunch service last March 1, the day Koreana celebrate their 1919 independence movement against Japan.

For this the 18 dissidents were sentenced by the Seoul district court in Au-gust to three to eight years in prism.

The latest hearings in the appeals court were marked by vigorous statements by the defendants. The court, sensitive to charges that the Government was influencing it, allowed them maximum free dom to defend themselves.

Caught in Cash Squeeze, They Ask Board to Unload Shares, Which Union Values at $33 Million

By A. H. RASKIN

The heads of the strife-torn United Mine Workers want to get the union out of the banking business that John L. Lewis got it into a quarter-century ego.

Mr. Lewis, for four decades the absolute ruler of the mine union, acquired three-quarters of the stock of the National Bank of Washington in a secret transaction in 1949 when the union wanted a place to keep its pension and welfare reserves. Mergers built the bank into second place among the capital's financial institutions. Its current assets are $500 million.

Now, according to Mike Trbovich, vice president of the union, the reform regime that ousted Mr. Lewis's heirs four years ago is caught in a cash squeeze that makes its chiefs eager to unload the union's 757,762 shares of bank stock. The value is carried on tha union's books at

Mr. Troovich said that the proposal to sell the shares was put before the union's executive board at a meeting in St. Clairsville, Ohio, two weeks ago by Arnold R. Miller, the union president, and Harry Patrick, its secretary-treasurer It is to be discussed as part of a total consideration of the organization's fi-nancial woes at the next board meeting Jan. 10.

Forecast Called Hazardons

So chaotic is the situation in the mine union that any forecast of probable action is hazardous. All three of the top officers are at war with one another, and the executive board rarely goes along with any recommendation by either Mr. Miller or Mr. Patrick.

Neither could be reached for com on the bank stock sale over this holiday nd, but Mr. Trbovich, once an ally of both and oow scarcely on speaking terms with either, had on reluctance to

In a telephone interview from the home of his son in Clarksville, Pa., the maners' vice president expressed doubt that the board would approve the Miller-Patrick suggestion. Almost in the same breath, however, he added that he falt it was a mistake for the union to own the stock. "When Miller put the matter before us, he told us we didn't have any business goal has been to make the changeover being in the banking husiness," Mr. Troovich said. "I never felt we should he in that particular bank. No coal miner can sponsibility for hringing about the coomendation, according to Mr. Trbovich, was a report by the officers that the union could not pay its hills and had to "sell

The only other union stock bolding

The only other union stock bolding covers 32 percent of the shares in the Rocky Mountain Fuel Company, with a listed value of only $221,788. However, Mr. Patrick informed the board that the present market price of the stock made the union's holding worth about $2 million.

The audited financial report of the union for 1975, as published in the current issue of The United Mine Workers Journal, shows it operated at a deficit of $3,588,118 for that year. Its income of $12,681,297 included a specific item of just under $3 million representing tha union's equity in the earnings of tha National Bank of Washington.

However, $1,25 million of this representations are proposed in the shares of the term now centimeteriog?—their way toward a formal policy.

Most districts report that students are receptive to metric categories, but that teachers, especially older ones nearing retirement, are often reluctant to change. There is also general agreement that, in the absence of a mandatory timetable, it is unrealistic to expect schools to get ahead of society as a whole.

Office of Education reports that boards of education in 27 states have passed "go matric" resolutions to be implemented by local boards; and in seven states, including Massachusetts, legislatures have set a date by which metric instruction must replace current programs. The District of Columbia, for example, will require all teachers to use the metric system by 1980. Louisiana has just completed a two-year teacher-training program and will require implementation in Most schools tend to begin with obvious areas such as mathematics and science classes, where metrics are already somewhat familiar, and then slowly work their way to the use of metrics in other areas such as history and literature.

Virtually all educators agree that the Great Commandment of introducing metrics is "Thou shalt not teach conversion."

That is, metrics should be understood as seriously. In Los Angeles, the school sysinflation were made, except in those programs, such as Social Security benefits, where an inflation adjustment is required by law.

If the amount that is spent on all Government programs is allowed in rise to take account of inflation the deficit would be $16 billion, the Congressional Budget Office found.

President Ford might still be able to present something close to a balanced budget even allowing for the inflation adjustments, if, as expected, his budget also included assumptions that Congress would enact all the money-saving programs he has proposed, without results,

Last year, Mr. Ford advocated moneysaving changes in the law ranging from requirements that Medicare beneficiaries pay more of the cost of relatively shortterm illnesses and that inflation adjustments in the pensions of retired Federal employees be reduced.

The money-saving proposals made by Mr. Ford that required Congressional ac-tion totaled $12 billion, and Congress ignored almost all of them.

Thus, if he repeats these proposals, as Mr. O'Neill indicated he would, and adds a few new ones, and makes some relatively optimistic but not unreasonable assumptions about the economy, he could project a budget balance for 1979.

The druge therapy has led to "dra-matic improvement" in more than 50 prematture babies, eccording to two groups of researchers from the University of California at San Diego and the Univer-sity of California at San Francisco.

The drug is indomethacin, which Merck Sharp & Dohme sells as indocio. The condition is called pateot ductus arteriosus, which often complicates the care of premature infants who develop another conditioo called the rspiratory distress syndrome in the first few hours of life.

Up to 15,000 babies brn in the United States each year are potential candidates for the drug herapy, Dr. William F. Friedman,t he pediatric cardiologist who heads the San Diego team said in an interview. The operation has been done for almost 40 years, and its cost can exceed $2,000.

Doctors Urge Caution

Elaborating on the studies that the California doctors reported recently io The New England Journal of Medicine, Dr. Friedman said: "The issue is no longer carf the drug he used as a substitute for surgery, because it can be."

Despite the success, Dr. Friedman and others familiar with the oew treatment urged cautioo before pediatricians else-where ried it. To help to determine the smallest effective dose of the potent drug and to gain other critical data, pediatricians at 10 other medical centers are joining those at the two California hospitals in a collaborative study. The study, which is being funded by the National Foundation, is being organized by Dr. Weltoo Gersony of Rabies Hospital here and by Dr. Alexander S. Nadas and Dr. Curtis Ellison in Boston. The group is also seeking funds from the National Institute of Health.

litrecent years, the patent ductus arteriorus has been a subject of renewed interest among pediatricians because they have become increasingly aware that the birth defect plays an important role in the pspiratory distress syndrome, which is the condition that killed on of President Kennedy's children.

patent ductus arteriosus. Structure Is Described

The ductus arteriosus is a structure that is vital for the fetus's survival to the womb. It is a tube that connects the pulmonary artery, which carries oxygenpoor blood to the lungs, and the aorta, which is the main blood vessel that carries oxygen-rich blood from the heart. When the fetus is in the womb, and does not use the lungs to breathe air, blood circulating in the fetus is shunted to avoid flowing through the lungs.

But when the baby enters the world and breathes air, the ductus begins to close, a process that usually is completed by the end of the first day. Some-blood from the aorta floods the lungs in-stead of flowing out to the rest of the body, creating further breathing prob-

Detection of the condition just after birth seems critical because the drug therapy apparently does oot work as well, if at all, after the infant has grown. Just when is the cut-off point? That is ooe of several other questions that researchers hope to answer in the cooper-ative study. And it will take several years to gain definitive answers, Dr. Ger-sony, the New York pediatric cardiologist

Meanwhile, Dr. Friedman's team bas been experimenting on animals to learn if other drugs could be more effective than indomethacin and also safer.

These studies have also ted to observ ations that suggest that the ductus arteriosus is not the passive channel that doctors have long believed it to be. Rather, it seems to be influenced by Rather, it seems to be including any imknown factors that may contribute to deaths of newborn babies. By trying to identify these factors, the pediatric cardiologists hope ultimately to lower further the oation's infant mortality rates.

Federal Study Finds Profits From Alaska Oil Are Expected to Be Limited by High Transportation C

By WALLACE TURNER Special to The New York Times

SAN FRANCISCO-The expected high cost of getting oil to market from Alaska's North Slope limits the prospects of huge profits for companies involved in the venture, according to a study by the Federal Energy Administration.

The massive price raises io late 1973 by the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries provided an economic justification for the project, which until then had appeared questionable. In 1968, when the first wells in the North Slope's rich Prudhoe Bay field were brought in, Saudi Arabian oil was being delivered to refineries in the San Francisco area for $2.50 a barrel. Prudhoe Bay oil could not compete at that price.

The increases, however, raised tha price of Arabian crude oil here to $12 to $13 a barrel—plus a further 5 to 10 percent rise resulting from OPEC actions. Under these circumstances, Alaskan oil, which is expected to begin flowing next summer, would be competitive.

The teriff has not yet been set but is already controversial. The F.E.A. study assumed it would be $4.60 a harrel. The state of Alaska, io addition to its 12.5 percent royalty at the wellhead, levies severance taxes, property taxes and state income taxes on profits. The Federal Government levies income taxes on pipeline profits, and on the "produc-tioo profit," which is the term for what is left for the owners of the wells.

The Atlantic Richfield Company, which will own about 250,000 barrels a day, will process the oil at its own refmeries on Puget Sound and at Long Beach, Calif. The Exxoo Corporation, owner of about 250,000 barrels, will ship some to its refinery oo San Francisco Bay, try to sell some and perbaps transport some by

3 Pipeline Proposals

Three pipeline systems have been seriously proposed. One of these is a plan of Sohio, as Standard Oil (Ohio) is known, that would send tankers from Valdez to Long Beach, where their cargoes would be transferred to a pipeline that would deliver the oil to Midland, Tex., and refineries in the Middle West.

The line woold go through Washingtoo, kdaho, Montana, North Dakota and Minnesota.

Senator-elect John Melcher of Montana a Democrat who is now a member of the House of Representatives, said he intended to organize support in the new Congress for this proposal because it would supply crude to refineries in Billings, Moot., Casper, Wyo., and North Dakota. Those refineries have been using Canadian crude.

Mr. Melcher noted that the Alaska Pipeline Act said the North Slope oil was a national asset that "should be equally shared, directly or indirectly, by all re-gions of the country." D. Michael Curran, president of Northern Tier, said the Sohio lice into Texas

This skyscraper is so spectacular it wears a brass plaque

Last week we showed you the pan-cake flats that are fine with full skirts. Now here's the other side of the fashion coin. (Remember what goes down must come up.)

These towering-terrifics are stopping traffic right now everywhere from the Via Veneto to the Left Bank. Ours not to wonder why. Ours only to take one look at what they'll do for a pretty pair of legs (like yours) and say "Aah!"

Leave it to the architects who create for Nina to come up with a design so revolutionary it rates a plaque. Every single pair of these skyscrapers (they'll take you a good four inches further up into the stratosphere) has its name, "Nina" emblazoned on brass.

However, it's not just height that makes our new shoes so sensational. These platform soles and tapered heels are beautifully grained wood. Natural wood that's been laminated and ingeniously bent with the same smooth curves your tennis racquet has.

More flattery: open-and-bare toes and heels, and skinny, sandaly straps.

Now here's how you'll wear them, with toned and textured stockings. And always with slim skirts. (That's your fashion recipe. Flats with full skirts, Nina's nifties with narrow ones.)

We think this new look is so exciting we have it four ways. The black patent we photographed, plus kidskin in wheat, navy or gold. (If you want to go young-Europe all the way, wear the gold kid in the daytime.) And the price is a pleasant surprise, 32.00.

Come pick a pair or two in Shoes on Two at Altman's, the store that always makes you feel on top of the fashion world.

From the Bowery to Westchester, a Day of Giving and Receiv

By JUDITH CUMMINGS

Amid the aromas of rosst goose and turkey, and the clutter of colorful ribhons and wrappings, people throughout the New York City area marked Christmas yesterday with traditional family gatherings, hearty feasts and the joys of giving and receiving gifts.

Across the city and in countless suburban towns there had been midnight church services, but children awoke early to rouse their parents for the day's big events. The visiting by friends and rela-tives began early and lasted late into the day.

By midafternoon, youngsters were testing the new toys brought by Santa, fathers were sporting new neckwear, mothers were basking in compliments over their culinary achievements, and the chaos of wrappings and piles of dirty dishes had reached a peak. But the complaints of fatigue were pronounced with smiles and forgotten with toests to good

Where a year ago lines of homeless meo waited for the doors to open at the Volunteers of America Tabernacle and the Christian Herald Mission, yes terday the men merely accumulated rather than thronged.

In many ways it seemed appropriate because the rest of the city early yesterday seemed equally subdued, as it usually is early on Christmas Day. A glance down the IND platform at Pennsylvania Station, bustling hours earlier, touched on a lone nun with a traveling

Ready for 1,000 Men

At the Christian Herald mission, on the Bowery at Prince Street, which for nearly 100 years has been serving the annual Christmas turkey dinner that many New Yorkers mistakenly associate with the Salvation Army next door, three dozen Mennonite visitors from Lancaster County. Pa., served a sit-down meal to partly empty tables of men. Last year, the mission served 900 meals on the two long white-covered tables, and this year it had prepared for more than a thousand. But the Rev. David G. Henritzy, the mission's director, said he doubted yesterday they would exceed 750.

The Volunteers had also planned to serve a thousand meals, but wound up serving "several hundred" fewer.

"It could be that a lot of them are under the weather from drinking and just couldn't get themselves moving to get here," Mr. Henritzy said: "Yoo know, Christmas Eve is much more of a drinking holiday than, say, the night before Thanksgiving so many of them just can't get around."

"Or maybe it's because it's cold out," he added.

Actually, the weather was not at all bad, as an older man who called himself Jesse noted outdoors in the Bowery sunshine after finishing his meal. "All you got to do is sit down and they feed you," he said, counting himself well-satisfied with his holiday dinner. "I don't was lowered."

A 1976 George Washington Crosses the Delawa

By ARI L. GOLDMAN

Special to The New York Times : WASHINGTON CROSSING PARK, N.J., Dec. 25-Christmas was a chilly trek across the Delaware River today for a group of Americans, much as it was 200 years ago on this day for Gen. George Washington and his men.

But for the hearty crew that crossed this afternoon in a re-enactment of the historic event of 1776, the journey was not a quest for freedom, but rather a celebration in its honor.

With the words of Washington, St. John Terrell, the theatrical prodocer, charged his men: "The eyes of all our countrymen are now upon us. The fate of unborn millions will now depend under God on the courage and conduct of this army.

Today, the eyes of thousands of those then unborn millions watched. They lined the New Jersey and Pennsylvania banks of the Delaware as four Durham boats filled with men in the garb of the Continental Army rowed across the

The re-enactment of the crossing hegan a 10-day Bicentennial festival in New Jersey that its organizers say will rival any of the octivities earlier this year in Concord Lexington or Philadel-

"Certainly the paper work was done in Philadelphia on the Fourth of July," said Governor Byrne, "but the war had to be fought and won in New Jersey." The Governor stood oo the chilly banks of the Delaware here and welcomed Mr. Terrell, who played Washington, and 160 of his troops as they debarked after their journey across the

Among the "soldiers" was H. David Earling, the executive director of the state's "Festival of 10 Crucial Days." state's "Festival of 10 Crucial Days."
"We'd all be getting Christmas greetings from the Queen today had it not been for Washington's crossing and the subsequent victories at Trenton and Princeton," he said.

The re-enactment of the crossing began at Pennsylvania's Washington Crossing Park early this afternoon when Mr. Terrell, dressed like the first Commander in Chief, mustered his troops at McKonkey's Ferry House. From there they marched to a nearby flagpole, where the men saluted the flag of 13 stars and then watched as it

The flag was put on a standard and handed to John S. Renninger, a State Assemblyman from Newtown, Pa., who played the role of Lieut, James Monero. (Monroe became the fifth President of the United States. Mr. Renninger, 51, was defeated in his race for a Congressional seat earlier this year.)

With the words of Weshington, Mr. Terrell then charged the troops. And then in his own words, he exhorted: "Gentlemen, to the boats."

A Quarter-Mile Trip

The men pild into four-large Durham boats, similar to the huge canoe-like craft that Washington used, for the craft that Washington used, for the quarter-mile trip to New Jersey. In the lead boat, Mr. Terrell stood upright with his blue cape flapping in the wind, his sword at his eft and his spyglass in his right hand. The "troops" were huddled about him as Mr. Renninger held about him as Mr. Renninger held about the 13-star flag. All of the crew members, doing their best to be true to the famous painting "Washington Crossing the Delaware," by the German artist Emmanuel Leutze.

As the eight oarsmen on each boat

As the eight oarsmen on each boat labored hard to cross the river, onlookers and photographers filled the two-lane Washington Crossing Bridge a few hundred feet away. "Too bad this was-n't here in Washington's day," one woman on the bridge comments

As the boat proceeded across the river, a narration over loudspeakers told of the original crossing 200 years ago tonight, Washington and his 2,400 men and camons and horses crossed the river under the cover of darkness. Parts of the river were frozen over with sheets of ice; freezing rain fell and a strong northeast wind blew.

Today, Mr. Terrell and his men crossed the Delaware under gray, threatening skies, but no rain or snow

Once on the New Jersey side, the men were greeted by Governor Byrne, who called it "a great day for New Jersey." The Governor praised the 60 year-old Mr. Terrell, who as Washington has crossed the Delaware every Christmas since 1953, and made him an honorary colonel in the state militia. Mr. Terrell later said that he considered the "honor" a "demotion."
"Tm a three-star general," he said as he happily signed autographs "General George Washington." After the crossing, an "American

Goodman Is Counting on Morrison In 1977 Campaign for Mayoralty

State Senator Roy M. Goodman is counting on his close friend and adviser, Edward A. Morrison, to reverse almost certain Liberal Party opposition to a Republican-Liberal coalition behind Mr. Goodman in his bid for the mayoraity next year. Mr. New York Morrison, a former Deputy Mayor in the administration of John V. Lindsay, has no Political Notes Liberal Party position now because he is holding a Carey administration post. But he is considered one of the heirs apparent to Alex Rose, the undisputed Liberal Party

In fact, Mr. Goodman has told other politicians—and even put it in writing—that Mr. Rose is ailing and that "new leadership" will emerge next year. Mr. Rose who is 78 years old bas been ill, but he said in a telephone conversation that he expects to be active in the mayoral campaign. Whether Mr. Morrison, who is a Carey appointee as chairman of the State Crime Victims Compensation Board, is the heir apparent is another questioo. Raymond B. Harding, the former Bronx Liberal leader who is a special assistant to Governor Carey, s considered the major rival of Mr. Morrison's in the Liberal Party, alhough he bas not been as visible as Mr. Morrison.

Thus, the Goodman candidacy could become the focal point of a power truggle within the Liberal Party. At he moment, the party leadership pub-icly regards a Goodman endorsement is still an open question. The major argument against Liberal adorsement of Mr. Goodman is that f elected he could become a major intagonist of the Governor as ha prepares for his own expected re-election ampaign in 1978. That is the chief itumbling block; our party is well incbored with the Governor," said a liberal leader. Even Mr. Morrison cooceded that a Republican Mayor could make trouble for a Democratic Governor. But he added that Mr. Goodman would be different because he would be a "fusion" mayor. Both Mr. Goodman and Mr. Vorrison were officials in the Lindsay administration, the last "fusion" administration.

Their friendship ripened while Mr.
Morrison was the Manhattan Liberal leader and Mr. Goodman the reciplent of Liberal endorsements for his state candidacies.

Speaking of Republican mayoral bopefuls, Barry Farber, the radio interviewer, is scouting up support. State Secator John D. Calandra, the Bronx Republican leader and a political foe of Senator Goodman, said he would back Mr. Farber, who dipped his toe in politics once before and was stomped by Bella S. Abzug in a West Side Congressional contest.

Mr. Farber has also met with Con-

Mr. Farber has also met with Con-

Mr. Farber has also met with Conservative Party brass and campaigned for the party's executive director, Serphin R. Maltese, who lost an Assembly race in Queens last month.

"His views are consistent with our philosophy." said Mr. Maltese. If he ran, Mr. Farber would have to give up any radlo work under the equal-time provisions of the Federal Communications Commission.

New York State had one of the worst voter turnout rates in the country outside the South in the Presidential election last month, according to data compiled by Congressional Quarterly.

Only 50.6 percent of the voting age population in the state turned out at the polls. In New Jersey, the figure was 58.5 percent and in Connecticut, 62.5 percent, Only the District of Columbia, Arizona, Hawaii and Maryland had lower percentage turnouts along with the 10 Southern states. The state with the nation's largest population, California, was only slightly better than New York, with 51.4 percent.

In all three metropolitan area states. the 1976 turnout was lower than that for the 1972 Nixon landslide, indicating voter discochantment and cynicism this year.

State Senator John R. Dunne, who is challeging the renomination of Nassau County Executive Ralph G. Caso, has been discussing with David Garth the handling of his radio, television and print advertising. Mr. Garth usually doesn't truck with Repoblicans, but he interested in Mr. Dunne who would is interested in Mr. Dunne, who would almost automatically become a major statewide figure if he could defeat Mr. Caso and the powerful Nassau Republican organization,

Murdoch About to Take Over Post; Texas Papers Thrive on Violence

This week Rupert Murdoch, the Australian publisher, will take over as the new owner of The New York Post Following are articles on Mr. Murdoch and his plans for The Post and on what he has done with two San Antonio newspapers he acquired in 1973.

Seeking to Build Circulation

By DEIRDRE CARMODY

Twenty-four years ago Sir Keith Murdoch, one of the commanding figures in Australian journalism, died and left The Adelaide News to his 21-year-old son street-corner rack for a local newspaper upert, who was at Oxford University. The young man returned home, took over the paper and began to build one of the most successful, controversial and daily, to that empire. His organization News Limited, also includes publishing touses, magazines and television station in Australia, England and the United States. But it is his flamboyant newspa pers with their screaming headlines and NUTS" and, his favorite, "UNCI sex and crime stories that have made TURES PETS WITH HOT FORK."

him famous on three continents. What many people do not realize is and dull, too. The other afternoon news-that Rupert Murdoch can also put out paper. The San Antonio Light, owned by a serious newspaper and keep it that the Hearst newspaper chain, was considered by many Texans to be the most sentent's first national newspaper—a staid. Rupert Murdoch, the Australian press full-sized paper that emphasizes national executive who owns the national weekly nent's first national newspaper—a staid, full-sized paper that emphasizes national and international news, investigative reporting and local news of a non-sensational nature.

The question is, which way will Ru-ert Murdoch go with The New York Post? Ever since the surprise amounce—advertising ment last month that Dorothy Schiff Mr. Murdoch entered into an agreement would end her 37 years as publisher of last month to buy The New York Post. The Post and sell it to Mr. Murdoch for from Dorothy Schiff, and he and his asa sum reported to be $27 million, the sociates have said that many changes speculation has been intense. Critics of will be made there. Charles O. Kilpatrick, Mr. Murdoch have predicted that The editorial publisher of The News and The Post, the oldest continuously published Express, said that The Post would be a it, the oldest continuously published ly newspaper in the United States—was founded by Alexander Hamilton 175 years ago—would be turned into a sex-and-scandal sheet similar to some of the Murdoch papers in Sydney, London and San Antonio.

Mr. Murdoch says it will not. He says hat the formula would not work in New York, where he is aiming at "the hig evening readership" and where he pre-sumably cannot afford to offend readers with too much sensationalism.

"Rupert is always very conscious of the market he is siming at," says an edi-tor who worked for him in Australia. "He's very commercial. If he thinks the market will carry his publication, he'll swing in that direction."

In addition to becoming publisher of The Post, Mr. Murdoch will take on the job of editor. This means be will make the day-to-day editorial decisions and chart the paper's journalistic course. He said in an interview be would take on this responsibility for "a medium period, maybe a year or so."

People who have worked with him talk about his cothusiasm and intense personal interest in any new property be acquires. They call him a shirtsleeves newspapermen who is quite capable, in the words of one associate, "of scaling pictures, writing headlines, rewriting leads and remaking page one 14 times on deadline."

Mr. Murdoch feels that the general

Mr. Murdoch feels that the general image of The Post, which has long been regarded as New York's liberal paper, is quite different from the actual product. "The man on the street sees The Post as a far-left paper, remembered for its position in the 1940's or more particular ly in the 1950's," Mr. Murdoch said.

The Australian's editor later said. "It and the newspaper waged a hard-hitting the newspaper waged a hard-hitting than the newspaper waged a hard-hitting campaign against him.

The Australian reached in 1974 of 154,000 compared the Government for supported him strongly in 1972, when the next then secretary, Priscilla. Felton, says, then streament for the street sees the Post way Mr. Murdoch explains the election took place Mr. Murdoch had become disenchanted with Mr. Whitlam and the newspaper waged a hard-hitting campaign against him.

It is now less liberal than the perception of it.

"A newspaper—the good paper, the paper thats going anywhere—has to have chemistry. Take The Sunday Times and Tha London Sun [generally regarded as either end of the journalistic spectrum in

The aim will be to attract more quality advertisers. This, says the Murdoch team, can be done by putting in more consumer news and more news of interest to women, so that major department stores, for instance, will want to reach Post readers.

Afternoon papers in big cities here been on the decline in general, but Mr. Murdoch has a record of taking failing papers and turning them around. According to the latest audited figures. The Post's circulation is now at 489,067, compared to its 1975 circulation of 517,982; Mr. Murdoch is aiming to increase the circulation to 700,000 by the end of one year and to a million by the end of two years, his associates say.

During his acquisitions, Mr. Murdoch has shown he is not afraid to take risks.

Lesson in The Mass Market

It was there that he learned how to produce the kind of paper that appeals to a mass market—with pretty women, racy headlines and crims and sex stories. His next such venture was in 1969 when he acquired Tha London Sun, which had been the Labor Board Sun, which had been the Labor Party paper, with a rapidly sinking circulation that was then put at 800,000. He applied the same formula convinced that there was a mass market of young readers who wanted a snappy paper they could read

Dogs Plague Rural Areas

For many years suburban and rural areas in the mid-Hudson region have been plagued by domestic dogs that band to-gether and run down wild deer, occasion-ally killing them but more often simply bringing them closer to death by starva-

Some resort areas in Sullivan and Ulster Counties also have packs of wild dogs made up of pets left behind during the vacation season. "I've seen everything from toy poodles to German shepherds chasing deer through the woods," said I'm Sulivan, a park ranger at Bear Mountain who hunts frequently in Orange County, "Normally a deer can leave a dog behind, but when snow is on the ground they're hampered. A deer's hoof will cut through the crust, while a dog can stay on top because of its padded feet."

This year's potential problem has arisen because hunters became concerned three years ago that deer populations were being reduced too much in the mid-Hudson region.

Sportsmen'a clubs asked the State Legislature to put some restrictions on the "harvesting" of bucks during the fall season. The Department of Environmental Conservation opposed the bunting restrictions, but the sportsmen prevailed in Albany. Now the department feels that there may be too many deer in the area. The sportsmen's clubs still maintain that the state is overestimating the size of berds.

"We're carrying shout 11 to 13 hucks per square mile," Mr. Ford said. "Ideally, we'd like to be down to around four to five in most areas. As the deer population action was taken and be expected five in most areas. As the deer population reaches the upper limits of its environment, the chances for catastrophe increase.

Beverly Sills In First Lucia At Met Opera

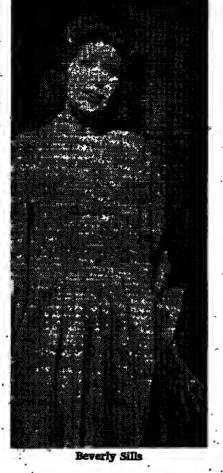

By PETER G. DAVIS

Repertory opera companies like the Metropolitan have a problem when Christmas Eve rolls around—there just are not many operas that might be considered appropriate to the season. In the past the Met has had to settle forsuch unlikely Yuletide offerings as "Fedora," "Tannhäuser," "La Gioconda" and, of all things, Halevy's "La Juive," which marked Enrico Caruso's 607th and last performance with the company on Dec. 24, 1920.

So, "Lucia di Lammermoor" seemed as good a choice as any for the occasion this year. Besides, Beverly Sills was singing her first Lucia at the Met and most operagoers would hardly object to such an apt Christmas present. Cer-tainly no other singer since Caruso has come to personify "opera" to se many Americans more than Miss Silks over the last 10 years.

No stranger to the role, Miss Sills has often sung tha mad Lucia in the current New York City Opera production. The Met's version, with most of the standard cuts and a traditional staging, is more theatrically conventional than the City Opera's treatment, and it focuses almost complete attention on the prima donna.

Miss Sills was singing at her best Friday night and she easily adapted to her new surroundings. She has al-ways paid Donizetti's heroins the compliment of taking her absolutely seriously, developing the character on a dramatic plane that most coloratura opranos hardly bother to indicate. Each twist in the plot seemed to drive this Lucia one step nearer to madness, so that when the Mad Scene finally came, it was an inevitable, even moving climactic event rather than an excuse for a spectacular singing exercise. Vocally, too, Miss Sills sounded more rested and refreshed than of late, and in command of nearly every situation. True, there is still a considerable flutter to her tone and she has developed a rather annoying habit of deflecting top notes of questionable quality either to the floor or into the wings.

Most of these problems were sur-mounted in the Mad Scene, which she

Music: A Christmas Concert

Alexander Schneider and New York String Orchestra Heard in 8th Event at Carnegie Hall

The night before Christmas, Carnegie Hall is inverlably astir, and Santa Claus is always Alexander Schneider. As in seven seasons past, Mr. Schneider and his New York String Orchestra celebrated by treating a large audience to a midnight concert.

The treat is for the players as well as the listeners, for the orchestra comprises a hand-picked group of young musicians ranging in age from 15 to 22. As participants in the annual Christmas String Seminar, jointly sponsored by New School Concerts and the Carnegie Hall Corporation, they spend 11 days rebearing and studying with Mr. Schneider, Isidore Cohen, Felix Galimir, Jaime Laredo, Mischa Schneider and Michael Tree. This year's crop, chosen by audition from over 250 applicants, represents high schools, colleges and conservatories from as far away as California.

Friday night's program included Han-del's Concerto Grosso in G major, Op. 6 No. 1, Mozart's "Haffner (K. 385), and Stravinsky's "Apollo." All three works received massive, vigorous readings that risked sounding ponderpolished, intensely committed playing discouraged complaint.

IN KILLING OF POLITICIAN

PARIS, Dec. 25 (AP)—A police investi-gation into the street killing of a promi-cent centrist politician, Prince Jean de Broglie, has produced oo clues, the police said today.

The victim, who was 55 years old, was shot down yesterday in the Rue des Dar-danelles, a quiet residantial street near the Porte Maillot. His assailant, a young man aged about 20, escaped.

The police said their inquiries had determined that that Mr. de Broglie had gone to the Rue des Dardanelles for an unannounced call on two business acquaintances who lived in the same house, One of the men was away on vacation, and the other, P. Allenet de Ribemont, said he had talked with Mr. de Broglie

The police said since Mr. de Broglia's visit to the street had been unplanned, the assailant had either trailed him there or had arranged a ameeting there with

Mirror in Casino Ceilings Conceals Security Aides Who Watch for Cheaters

RENO, Nev. (AP)-They say the hand is quicker than the eye, but here in Reno the hands are seldom quicker than the "eyes in the sky," the mirrors on casino ceilings.

To honest customers the mirrors are just decoration. To cheaters, however, the mirrors have a more serious meaning. Behind the two-way mirrors are trained security personnel watching for the disbonest patron.

Most experts say cheating at the gaming tables is on tha decline, largely because of the mirrors and television cameras that most clubs use to monitor players. Despite thte decline, bowever, it is estimated that dishonest gamhlers get more than $20 million a year from casinos, which handle $1 billion a year. Harolds Club is one of the oldest Nav-

Founded by the State Legislature in 1912 as the State Agricultural Institute, Ida Handwerker, Who Started Nathan's Famous With Her Husband. Dies

Ida Handwerker who with her late busband, Nathan, founded Nathan's Famous Inc., the hot-dog and fast-food restaurant chain, died Friday at Mount Sinai Hospital in Miami Beach after a beart attack. She was 79 years old and lived in North Miami Beach.

For nearly 60 years, Mrs. Handwerker was known to many as "Mrs. Ida" and "Mrs. Coney Island." In 1972, she retired as a director of Nathan's Famous and moved to Florida with her husband, who died in 1974.

Mr. Handwerker came to the United States in 1912 from Poland penniless. He worked as a part-time delivery boy for $4.50 a week on the Lower East Side and on Sundays he and his bride, the former Ida Greenwald, worked as roll-slicers at Feltman'a German Gardens in Coney Island. The late Eddie Cantor and Jimmy Durante, who were singing waiters at Coney Island, were said to bave persuaded them to open their own stand and sell nickel bot dogs. In 1916, Mr. and Mrs. Handwerker took their savings of $300 and opened a small stand at Surf and Stillwell Avenues in Coney Island. Their five-cent frankfurters spiced with Ida's secret recipe soon caught on and the business expanded. The chain now comprises more than 50 fast-food restaurants. In 1936, when President Franklin D

'Sometimes IFeel Like the Oldest Living American'

WASHINGTON, Dec. 24—One prob-lem facing Shirley Temple Black, Presi-dent Ford's chief of protocol and former envoy to Ghana, is where to take the diplomatic corps to lunch after Jimmy Carter's mauguration on Jan. 20. She thinks they will probably end op at Blair House, the official guest residence across from the White House, with "three buffets going at both ends of the house," she said in a recent interview in her office in the State

"The diplomats are good sports," she said, "and they'll adjust to the prob-lems we'll have."

A eecondary matter is what Mrs. Black, a Republican, will do next her-self after nearly a decade of Govern-

"Sometimes I feel like the oldest living American," she said, laughing, a reference to the fact that the one-time child movie star has worked 45 of her

Mrs. Black was wearing a colorful wool print by Herschelle, a San Francisco designer whn makes all her clothes, knee-high bloe leather boots, and assorted pieces of gold and blue jewelry. Her long brown hair, worn in a chignon for years, was shorn seven inches a month ago, but her 5-foot-2-inch figure is still modeled more to the taste of Peter Paul Reubens than Yves Saint Laurent.

Interest in Foreign Affairs

Mrs. Black, whose first screeo utterance at 3½ years of age was "Oui, moncher," has kept up not only her French, but also speaks some Russian, Rumanian, Serbo-Croatin, Arabic, and Da (Ghanaian), and she would enjoy fur-ther work in the foreign service.

"I would like to stay in international relations, and I'd like to go o another! third world country," she said. "I understand the problems of the developing world, and I have lots of solutions for solving them, but they're all costly."

A trip to China is on her agenda, and she wished she could remember the "beautiful, perfect" Mandarin she mastered at the age of 7 in her film, "Stow-waway."

"away"

Or she could "seek a job" with the World Health Organization or the Food

Organizations of the and Agriculture Organizations of the United Nations, since she has worked for them in the past.

Many people still think she's at the pulited Nations and write to her there.

She served there in 1969 as a delegate who was especially popular with Third world members.

A committed ecologist, she was from 1970-72 deputy chairman of the United States delegation to the Preparatory Committee on the Uoited Nations cooference oo the Human Environment in Stockholm. From 1972-74, she was a special assistant to the chairman of the Council on Environmental Quality.

She was in Moscow in 1972, as a delegate at a United States-Soviet treaty conference on the eovironment, when take ooticed a small lump in her left breast. Specialists thought that it was benign, but a "burning sensation" per-

Her mastectomy two months later in California was a "real shock," but shortly after the operation, wearing a coral negligee and gardenia in her hair, she called reporters to her hospital bed to publicize her experience so that other women would not "sit home and be

Her appointment to Ghana in the fall of 1972 was called "outrageous and irrelevant" by a prominent African specialist but State Department officials now coocede she was an outstanding appointee, perhaps one of the best. In one foreign service officer's view, her performance surpassed that of even some career amhassadors by about "two-thirds."

Often appearing at formal functions in a brightly printed cotton turban and long, matching dress, the national costume, she encouraged American investment and development in Ghana to the extent that she became a symbol of increased United States interest in Africa.

Her persocal concern over public health, outrition, and rural development added impetus, one official said, to programs of the Agency for International Development. She rarely ventured outside the Ghanaian community, on duty, or off, and delegated unofficial duties to her oldest daughter, Susan, who is now 28 and married to an Italian diplomat there. Susan is the an Italian diplomat there. Susan is the offspring of Mrs. Black'e first marriage.

Foreign diplomats who have seen her

Foreign diplomats who have seen her old films at home regard her as "a friend" and she is able to "discuss political issues and get their feelings oo a kind of trusted basis."

Her persocal diplomacy style is to "get oo an informal footing" with whomever she is talking to, establish an "easy rapport" and then begin asking questions so she can "think of some way to assist."

"Cloying sentimentality" and descriptions of her as a "former dimpled moppet" infuriate her. She's interested in "people, all people," hut is most drawn to those who are "realistic and real politic." The quality of sincerity, is not in "abundance in the real world," Mrs. Blackhoted. Mrs. Black noted. Her Personal Views

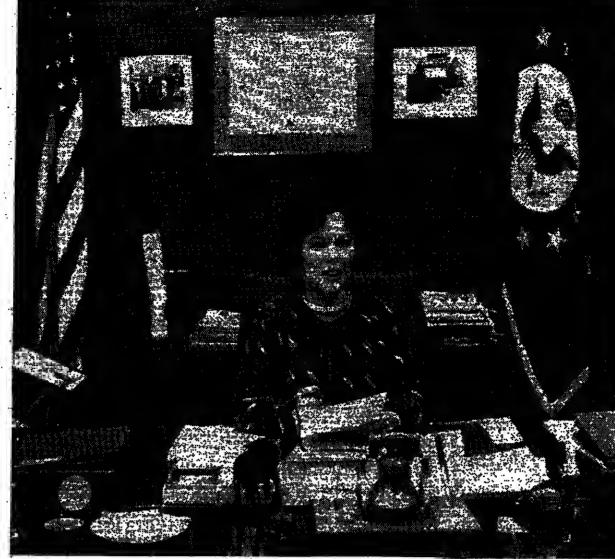

Her views are "quite the same" as they've always been, but she has the "knowledge cow to back them up." She called herself "liberal" in the interna-tional field, "conservative" io domestic and fiscal affairs and "probably moder-

She and her husband, Charles, re-ceotly celebrated their 26th wedding anniversary.

"We've never had a fight," she said.

"We haven't had a bad argument. We don't have any blank conversation lulls. We're always talking to each other and communicating. It's been just a marvelous marriage in all respects," She keeps a low social profile in Washington, as she did at the United Nations and in Ghana, and "ooe of the problems" of her present job has been a lifeloog aversion to parties. A great music station should bring you great music.

That's its primary job.
And WQXR does that job.
But we think a great music station should be a great station, too. Which means it should be a vivid tapestry of music, insight into music, and fascinating personalities.

It should please, delight, inform and enrich its listeners.

That's what we aim for And succeed at We're unique.

Because there may be other stations in New York that play great music. But there's only one great music station that's a great station, too.

Revivals Were the Hit In a Year of National Celebration

By HILTON KRAMER

Bicentennial: It already requires a certain effort of mind, in looking back on the events and accomplishments of the year, to recall exactly what this 200th anniversary of the nation's birth brought us in the way of artistic revelation about our culture and our lives. There were stretches of weeks and months during the year when we seemed to be glutted with performances, exhibitions and publications geared to the Bicentennial observance or at least financed by the generous nums of money allocated for the Bisense of what it all added up to is by no means easy to come by. The feeling persists that, amidst all the clamor and energy, a great opportunity was somehow lost—the opportunity, above all, to redefine the aspiration and achievement of democratic culture both for ourselves and for our friends and enemies in this world. We seem not to have been quite equal to the occasion.

Of course it came at a bad time. Watergate had inflamed passions that had not yet recovered from the trauma of the war in Vietnam. This gave to the morracy a "case," even if a false one, that might otherwise have been denied them. It added a significant increment to the sum of political paranois that, since the assassination of John F. Kennedy, had been steadily gaining force as one of the most powerful constituents of our cultural life.

An atmosphere of political paranola is not conducive to creative acts of celebration. It tends to devalue the fealties and decencies of the con life, to induce attitudes of irony and pression of apocalyptic revenge or a means of esthetic withdrawal into a utopia of private sensation. It produces laureates on the order of Norman Mailer, on the one hand, promising us ever greater infusions of fire and brimstone in the life of the imagination, or the poet John Ashbery, on the other, holding out the possibility of an estheticism so hermetic and so absolute that it virtually denies the efficacy of common experience and the workaday ncerns of society.

The Bicentennial arrived at a moment in our cultural life when the arts were unpracticed in, if not actually hostile to, the task of recreating-the images and rituals of a shared destiny. Whitman, in "Democratic Vistas," had envisioned an American future when "the virtue of modern Individualism"—"continually enlarging," he wrote, "usurping all"—might be reconciled with "the like of the ancient virtue of Patriotism, the fervid and absorbing love of general country," but a century after that hope was so eloquently expressed, it remained an unattained, if not an unattainable, ideal.

The arts had become so skilled at either mocking the basic ethos of our national life or effectively ignoring it that not even the Bicentennial could succeed in eliciting any fresh artistic thought about who, as a nation, we are, or what we represent, or where we might be expected to go in the future. It seemed old-fashioned, "square," perhaps even reactionary, to be concerned with such questions. The American artist remained fixed in the two postures that he and his public knew simply the best films of the year. It's also people, tions of old truths, exceptions to rules. The ing my choices for the best films of the year, though not in any particular I. Show biz is no biz. They call it an industry but the making of movies remained the biggest crap game in the world in 1976. Dino De Laurentiis has between $22 million and $25 million riding on a bet that says a large proportion of the world's population can't wait to see a remake of "King Kong." It's still too early to tell how he'll make out, though De Laurentiis knows as well as anybody that nothing in movies is a sure thing. The low-budget "Rocky" will probably make a far greater percentage of profit than "The Missouri Breaks," which statted Marlon Brando and Jack Nicholson, "Harry and Walter Go To New York" (Elliott Gould, James Caan and a script in the mode of "The Sting") died upon delivery at theaters, while "Cousin Cousine," a small French comedy that opened here without benefit of star names or publicity, has become a smash. I have faith that good movies will survive even if this is The Year of The Ape. 2. Lina Wertmuller. The phenomenal critical success of as well as box office support for-Lina Wertmuller's "Seven Beauties" not only announces the arrival of a fine new Italian directorial talent but also the beginning of the end of our prejudice against women-as-directors. Werimuller's films are so complex, so full of life, that it's not simply unnecessary to read them as the Statements of A Woman, but inadequate to the task. We no longer have to wonder that Wertmuller, Elaine May, Jeaune Moreau, Marguerite Duras, Shirley Clarke, Dyan Cannon and Dozothy Arzner have directed films without suffering fainting fits. We look at their movies for what they are. Some are fine. Some are stinkers, and a lot are

Jerween. 3. "All The President's Men." It adapting the fascinating Watergate book by Carl Bernstein and Bob Woodward, the Washington Post reporters, director Alan J. Pakula, writer William Goldman, and stars Dustin Hoffman and Robert Redford have successfully brought off what no folksy, seven o'clock TV news team has ever done. They've made contemporary history seem urgent and the practice of journalism important. And even though all of us knew the end of the story, they made a film as exciting and as full of suspense as any conventional caper

4. Ingmar Bergman's "Face to Face."
Having completed "Face to Face," the sorrowful and resonant study of the suicidal breakdown of a perfectly composed woman (a psychiatrist magnificently played by Liv Ullmann), Bergman went into self-imposed exile from his native Sweden, the result of a traumatic confrontation with bureaucracy in a perfectly composed socialist state. The film, which could be the last Bergman will ever make in Sweden, may not have been conceived as political though all its implications are. Bergman is now completing a film in Germany. We wait to see how his artistry will survive outside the persicular Swedish environment through which his films have always reached in.

5. Jean Renoir. He is 82 and hasn't made a film since 1969 ("The Little Theater of Jean Renoir") yet Renoir, who now lives in California, being a master, is able to make us marvel still. One of the joys of this film season was Renoir's 1931 "La Chienne," his first Continued on Page 15

FAT FVFNING IN T

There is crackling natural humor, sheer fun and of course, theatricality. The acting is bold, and Tennessee Williams' plays call for courageous strokes. Richard Chamberlain, making his Broadway debut as this burnt-out case of broken-down preacher, is excellent in his doubts, his strengths, his desperations. He looks defeated and yet gallant, a wronged, rather than damned soul. Dorothy McGuire, tight, gentle, confident and yet inwardly nervous, makes a fine foil to him as the spinster, while Sylvia Miles, loping through the play with brash sensuality,

Barbara Caruso's termagant of a music mistress. H. R. Poindexter's set is perfect and Noel Taylor's costumes are evocative. Joseph Hardy is an expert, he approaches revivals not as resuscitations but as renewals and this enables him to hring the kind of freshness to the production that he provides in this 'Night of the Iguana'! -Clive Barnes, N.Y. Times

A sublime and richly textured production. Director Joseph Hardy has discovered new layers of colors and textures, giving the play a central vision, and providing a new awareness of Tennessee Williams and the ghosts that haunt him. The result is an 'Iguana' that shows it to be a much better play than anyone credited it for being. Richard Chamberlain is one of America's finest actors and gives a portrayal that's dynamic and heartfelt. It's a creation of consummate skill that left me slack-jawed. Luminous Dorothy McGuire is so haunting and delicate that she

"POETIC ELOQUENCE, humanistic compassion and arresting vitality. It is hoped that one of these years the judges in Stockholm will confer upon Tennessee Williams the Nobel Prize for literature!"

-T.E. Kalem, Time Magazine

"MAGIC! It is a major production and it ranks among the playwright's best works. Richard Chamberlain is superh! An actor of considerable range, conveying marveously the rage and despair of a man at the end of his rope. Dorothy McGuire gives a lovely, softlyshaded performance. An ideal role for Sylvia Miles who handles the strident humor well. Insightfully directed hy Joseph Hardy." -Alian Wallach, Newsday

"EXCELLENT! 'Iguana' rivots its audience to its every word and nuance. Richard Chamberlain is splendid in a dynamic, very impressive performance. Dorothy McGuire is very convincing and poignant"-Alvin Klein, WNYC

"A MUST! Among the season's best. Impressive artistry, poetic imagery and haunting emotional insight. Must rank as a main event for every admirer of absorbing drama!"

-Williem Glover, Associated Press

"SPLENDID! A Superior production! Driving force; it breathes, it steams, it is remarkably humorous!" -Leonard Probst, NBC

"A WELCOME TO BROADWAY! Tennessee Williams has worked out a beautiful dramatic balance hetween his three characters and Richard Chamherlain, Dorothy McGuire and Sylvia Miles, hringing strong qualities to these characters."

-Edwin Wilson, Wall Street Journal "BRAVO! You must see it at once! Taut, compelling and haunting, 'Iguana' is filled with delicate and profound insights and there are lyric passages of enormous beauty. It's a top theatre event of this or any season. Richard Chamberlain, making his Broadway dehut, gives a virtuoso performance. Dorothy McGuire is superh. Sylvia Miles offers the best performance of her career. The director, Joseph Hardy, has worked miracles. He has discovered the heart of the matter. This 'Iguana' is far superior to the original," -Emory Lewis, The Record leaves the audience transfixed. There is no more radiant actress alive today. In her scenes with Mr. Chamberlain, there is mercurial tension that raises the play to heights of power I have seldom seen equalled. The audience is hypnotized. Sylvia Miles gives the play a strong sense of survival spirit. She is a handsome predatory bird, who will endure to soar again. Nothing we've seen of Tennessee Williams' work in recent years is in the same league with this vital. memorable production! ??

Iere's to Those Who Keep Coming Back

ye, bye, Bicentennial. In some undefined, utterly random, scat-terdemalion way the New York theater—and theater across the land—was supposed to be making its own special contribution to the Bicentennial year we'll be ringing out, with ever cracked bells, in a few days now. While tall ships coming down the coastline to excite the admiration ne and all, the tall plays of America's past were cted to march by on this stage or that, reminding us we do so have a national heritage. Trouble is, it was eft to chance, to whatever odd works individual commight be able to cast and squeeze in, and that's ay to run a national library.

We did get our peeks, some severely disappointing, some mildly provocative, which I suppose is about par for peeks. The Phoenix Thester made a bent daguerreotype out of William Gillette's "Secret Service" (1895), the Roundabout an exceedingly sour saxophone solo out of Booth Tarkington's "Clarence" (1919). The Chelsea in Brooklyn did better with Edward Sheldon's "The Boss" (1911), one of the century's first "realistic" appraisals of the rise of the Irish and their impact on urban politics, while an obscure downtown playhouse called The American Theater Company did best of all by exhuming Robert Munford's "The Patriots." Here was life in 1776 with its high-level chicanery, including McCarthylsh witch-hunting, intact, and all straight from the horse's mouth; I'm thinking of Paul Revere's horse, because the piece was written in 1776.

Away from New York, institutional theaters were putting together productions of Percy Mackaye's "The Scaregrow" (1908), Joseph Jefferson's "Rip Van Winkle" (1865) and heaven knows how many other faded treasures from the theatrical trunk, but since none of these made their way into Manhattan they must remain something in the nature of Tumors A number that was a real number. the nature of rumors. A rumor that was a real rumor tautalized me the year through. At least four productions of Langdon Mitchell's "The New York Idea" (1906) were promised by various organizations hither and you, and, since I've been waiting my life long to see "The New York Idea" on stage, even the Bicentennial began to look good to me. Alas, not one ever materialized, and I'm still here twiddling my thumbs. If some mounting doesn't emerge, beintedly, within the next quarter or so, I'm going to have to review it anyway, just to calm my 12-month tremor.

The year in New York did, however, open with one reassuring revival, reassuring in ways the show itself couldn't have predicted. That was "The Royal Family," last January's nod to times past. The times weren't very far past, since Edna Ferber and George S. Kaufman had composed their affectionate genuflection to Broadway (and sideswipe at the Barrymores) as late as 1927. But the play was not only full of fondly recalled ghosts; it was, as Ellis Rabb put it together, an ironic prophecy of the future, too. Warn't meant to be. An accident of casting made it

The accident—and no accident—was the summoning of Eva LeGallienne to play Fanny Cavendish, matriarch of an acting clan that was always threatening to misbehave itself. Miss LeGallienne's function as a character in the lightly satirical comedy was a double one; she was there to represent stardom, the incandescent power of the spotlight, reminding us of the days when plays were written to order for actresses and kept on hand for touring purposes whenever New York was dullish; and she was there to hold her brood together, to keep them from straying into marriage or other misadventure that would take them away from the footlights, to see to it that they remained

No problem about Miss LeGallienne as star, as we were perfectly well aware watching her skip with ingenue lightness up a stairwell in Act One and descend it with sedate care to let us know that Fanny Cavendish was aging in Act Three, Lovely shift in rhythm, looking lovely in mauve, Miss LeGallienne had always been, still was,

Papp Argues Against a National Theater

New York Times ["Critic's Comments, Not Complaints, roadway, Mr. Papp and the ec. 8] Clive Barnes noted that ry Theater, which had fust vis-York for the first time since very clearly Ireland's national Mr. Barnes then went on to part, that:

Inited States does not have a theater, and we can deny that fact until we are red, white in the face but it cannot refactuality. Of course, we can int our resident theater, across itry, is a national theater, or ph Papp's multifarious organizaries in such a capacity, but, will won't do."

[Note that it cannot refact to a capacity or ph Papp's multifarious organizaries in such a capacity, but, will be a capacity, but, will be a capacity of the same present not usoln Center very cleverly. He wing the American people what ould like to see something in Manhattan" and a third 1 a recent dream for a nation-ill right! These Anglo-fantasies nendable, but what do they lo with any serious consideran American national theater? r. Barnes and his British colre acutely aware (having been and part of the struggle to British National Theater) that theaters do not spring up full-Tut evolve out of a country's cultural experiences and goodly number of first-class theatrical institutions, developed and cultivated over many, many years. And when after 115 years the British Government made its decision to proceed with the construction of a multi-million-dollar theatrical complex on the banks of the Thames River, and also to assume the major financial responsibility for its operation, it did so in 1963, when the country's economy was not visibly in the chaotic condition it is in today. Is it not clear then, to Mr. Barnes, that favorable esthetic and financial conditions must prevail in the United States. before any serious steps can be taken in the direction of a national theater? Mr. Barnes gives his readers the impression that starting a national theater is like starting a car. "A national theater," he claims, "should have about 150 actors on a permanent contract and it should be independent of any commercial worries, other than those of keeping its losses reasonable and in proportion, comparable and consistent with the Government's investment in education."

'Should we have the stilted Comedie Française or a theater ruled by socialist selecting methods?

Now when in God's name has any theater been able to keep its losses reasonable? Especially in these days of skyrocketing costs; especially if a na-tional theater is to be venturesome and no lap dog to the status quo; especially if it is a Government-subsidized institution of massive proportions; how? reasonable? Had Mr. Barnes made the effort to examine the costs of his proposal, it might have restrained his impetuosity. He needed only to have inquired of Peter Hall, director of the many pounds it takes merely to maintain the premises of his three-theater complex, not to mention 150 actors on permanent contract."

In the United States, if we were to engage 150 actors for a national company, we would have to consider "reasonable" annual salaries in the area of $15,000 to $50,000, depending upon the status of the actor. Let us be charitable and establish a mean of $25,000 per actor per year, which comes, Mr. Barnes, to $3,750,000! And shall we add to this staggering sum the salaries of designers, technicians, directors, administrators, cleaning people, engineers, elevator operators, ushers, electricians, not to mention the cost of fuel and electricity, publicity,

In a theater budget, actors' salaries generally make up some 20 percent of the total, if 20 percent is almost 4 million and the remaining 80 percent represents $16 million, we have a grand total of $20 million spent annually for one theater in one city of the United States; and that city, Mr. Barnes suggests, should be New York. To speak about parity with the "government's investment in education," in a city where its own university system has been devastated with a $135 million cut eliminating thousands of teachers from the schools system is-how shall I characterize it-insensitive.

Has Mr. Barnes ever considered the consequences of an artistic endeavor with esthetic goals placed at the mercy of a crushing annual hudget, one that must be met in great part by the act of producing attractive weres to fill thousands and thousands of seats year in and year out? Is not this lunacy of the first order?

In our newest national theater, that of Great Britain, we see already a frantic quest for theatrical product, a need to fulfill seating quotas to justify massive expenditures of the people's money and to keep "these losses reasonable." What can all this lead to but the transformation of an arts complex into a national monument to tourism? Europe abounds with the husks of old world national theaters. Are we to model ourselves after these theaters, Mr. Barnes? freland's Abbey, once a flourishing and innovative theater, is now a moribund institution, rehashing old plays, fearful of new. Having lost its best actors to American films many years ago and having the distinction of causing one of its best playwrights, Sean O'Casey, to flee the country with a broken heart. Is this the national theater so dear to Mr. Barnes?

Perhaps he prefers the Comédie Française with its stilted revivals and its complete disconnection with contemporary France and French life, not to mention its super-unionized seniority system which serves efficiently to deny young actors the opportunity of advancement. Or is he asking us to emulate the Swedish National Theater, which so recently lost its prime director, Ingmar Bergman, without the slightest protest or a call for a general strike; a theater which now has instituted an "improved" socialistic method of selecting plays by a vote of the entire theater work force? Can Mr. Barnes possibly suggest we follow national theater models of the Communist countries, where government control stifles every vestige of artistic freedom?

What national theater in the entire world today has made more exciting contributions to the art of the theater than any one of the high-quality nongovernmental theaters in England and the United States?

If any question is to be raised regarding a national theater in the United States, that question is, "Is it necessary?" Is the old-fashioned, old-world national theater, a highly structured, highly controlled theatrical institution, the proper instrument for a modern democracy with a diverse population of over 200 million, sprawling over three-and-a-half-million square miles of territory? Is such a rigid structure, having Its history in kings and aristocrats and small Europesu countries, the irst a general disclaimer. The "best ten" of anything in a non-objective world is perhaps a little naive. The arts do not lend themselves to what might be termed the Guinness Book of Records view of life. Yet a personal choice is O.K. The film critics get acres of space out of it. The Ten Worst Films, the Ten Best Films, the Ten Most Sophisticated Films to be shown in Little Rock, Arkansas, between June and September on Sunday afternoonsthe film critics have it made. I rather like this idea. I would like, for example, to draw up a list of the "Ten Most Promising Dancers Who Jumped Out of a Cake in 1976," or the "Ten Union Leaders Who Have Most Affected "the Course of Ballet History."

W" and my mind goes blank. I start looking up diaries and old notices, and talking disconsolately to better memories than mine on the telephone, but chiefly to no avail. Nevertheless, here I am, committed to draw up 2 list of the 10 most important people, things or events that enlivened or appalled (or both) the ballet world in this Bicentennial Year. That is what I am going to do. And, of course, my mind has just gone blank.

So much for the apology, now for the list. Four provisos. First, this is completely personal, even idiosyncratic, and any omissions are probably pure forgetfulness on my part. Second, I have deliberately left out things not directly related to the stage-for example, Jac Venza's most significant TV series "Dance in America," and the movies made this year starring two of the great male dancers of the world—Rudolf Nureyev in Ken Russell's "Valentino," and Mikhail Baryshnikov in Herbert Ross's "The Turning Point." Third, I have chauvinistically concentrated on the United States, ignoring such interesting overseas developments as the gradual upgrading of the Paris Opera Bellet by Rolf Liebermann and his lieutenant, Hughes Gall. Finally, I have not mentioned—in the vain hope that it might be settled before these words appear—the musicians' strike against New York City Ballet, which could easily turn out to be one of the most grievous tragedies in American dance history. The list, incidentally, is in no order whatsoever. It also cheats outrageously, because I have grouped some things together.

Number One. It was a great year for Mikhail Baryshnikov. He danced, principally, with American Ballet Theater, but also made his debut with Britain's Royal Ballet. Despite an occasional injury, he was dancing superlatively, in such works as Twyla Tharp's "Push Comes to Shove," and the classics, giving, for example, an almost definitive performance of the "Don Quixote pas de denx," with Netalia Makarova, for a special gala in aid of the New York Public Library. At the end of the year, he made his debut as a choreographer, with a production of "The Nutcracker" for American Ballet Theater. Alfred Knopf, by the way, has published a sensational book of photographs of Baryshnikov by Martha Swope, with himself describing and documenting all his roles in the West.

Number Two. It was, in case anyone wondered what all the flags were doing, the year of the Bicentennial, and the United States played host to dance companies from Australia, Britain, Canada, Denmark, Holland, Mexico, Spain and the Soviet Union. The traffic was not, however, onesided. New York City Ballet paid back the debt of Lafayette with an overwhelmingly successful season in Paris, while the Martha Graham Company, on a more extended tour, not only captured Paris, but stormed London's Covent Garden—the first modern-dance troups to play in that bestion of classicism—with a sold-out, two week season. The Alvin of classicism—with a sold-but, two-week season. The Alvin Ailey American Dance Theater and Arthur Mitchell's Dance Theater of Harlem, more familiar European hands, repeated their trimmphs of recent years. The Pilobulus Dance Company, at the Spoleto Festival, and the Twyla Tharp Company, were other groups on oversess detachments. Both the Murray Louis Company and the Eliot Feld Ballet did well in South America, and there are doubtless some others I have, inadvertently, failed to mention. If was a great year for feet across the sea.

Number Three. Among the visitors to New York, the Royal Danish Ballet was noteworthy, if only because it had been absent from the United States since 1965. It was had been absent from the United States since 1965. It was well-received, particularly for its Bournonville works, and Flemming Flindt's "The Triumph of Death," which had the distinction of bringing midity to the Metropolitan Opera House for the first time, proved a popular hit. Talking of Mr. Flindt and nudity, both turned up earlier is the year in an erotic revue in Copenhagen, called "Gorgeons Bitch," featuring dancers of the Royal Danish Ballet. Finally, Mr. Flindt announced his resignation from the direction of the company, effective from 1978—after 12 years in the driver's seat, he feels he's had enough. They have been years of Danish innovetion, however—only this fall the company became the first classic troupe to create a full-evening pany became the first classic troupe to create a full-evening modern-dance work, Murray Louis's "Cleopatra." Ironically, by the way, the dancer who probably had the greatest personal success was one of New York City Ballet's resident Danes, Peter Martins.

Number Four. Twyla Tharp planges on, hell-bent on becoming the Martha Graham de nos jours. She featured the new "wedge" haircut by Vidal Sassoon (or was that last year?), and created or helped create, a new art form on ice—becoming the first major choreographer to collaborate with an ice skater, in "After All" for the Olympic Gold Medallist John Curry. In a more conventional mood, she choreographed "Push Comes to Shove" for Mikhail Barryshnikov and Ballet Theater, "Happily Ever After" for the Joffrey Ballet; as well as works for her own company, which played a sold-out engagement at the Brooklyn Academy of Music, Miss Tharp's reputation is not only hot—Miss Tharp herself is good. Number Four. Twyla Tharp phinges on, hell-bent on Tharp herself is good.

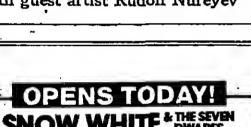

Number Five. What were the major new ballets? The best in classic dance were disappointingly perhaps, all by the old masters. There was George Balanchine's "Chaconne" and "Union Jack," Frederick Ashton's "A Month in the Country," and Jerome Robbins's "Other Dances." The modern-dance choreographers were more productive, as usual, with Twyla Therp (see above) and Paul Taylor having a particularly successful year, even though it brought Mr. Taylor (see below) to the brink of extinction.

THE WILD TOOK PROPERTY AND THE A SECTION OF THE SEC

One of the year's most moving and sensitive movie experiences. It will be a sad and despondent loss for anyone who misses it. 'VOYAGE OF THE DAMNED' is engrossing and powerful...an epic film. It is more fulfilling and refreshing than I can tell you. Director Stuart Rosenberg has done a magnificent job. To weave such a splendid tapestry of humanity, a cast of unprecedented artistry was needed, and every performer has responded. Everything about 'VOYAGE OF THE DAMNED has been touched with greatness...memorable portraits etched in blood, preserved in beauty and deeply felt. It is perceptive, eloquent and enduring-here, at last, is a film that elevates its viewers. 'VOYAGE OF THE DAMNED' towers above most ordinary movies in theme and execution. THE PERFECT MOVIE FOR THIS SEASON AND FOR ALL SEASONS."

"AN EXTRAORDINARY EXPERIENCE! "VOYAGE OF THE DAMNED' is a rare movie... wildly enchanting and hypnotic." —LIZ SMITH, Cosmopolitan

ONE OF THE TEN BEST FILMS OF THE YEAR AND FRANKLY THE MOST SATISFY-ING ALLSTAR PRO-DUCTION I HAVE EVER SEEN...the film sets a new high standard for films of its kind. The cast could fill the Oscar nominations list. 'VOYAGE OF THE DAMNED' is in a class with 'The Godfather' and 'The Exorcist'...it's solid entertainment."

"One of the year's finest motion pictures... AN UNFORGETTA-BLE MOTION PIC-TURE EXPERIENCE!

In but which was released here for the first time collect titles. In "La Chienne" Renoir transforms a benal story about a prissy, middle-aged bookkesper Simon) who falls in love with a two-timing tart by transfers in a rage of humiliation, into a nearly man comedy. Although heroes, rascals, shrews and cheats can be recognized in the landscape, Remoir doesn't take sides to point a moral. He appreciates all of his characters and their curious circumstances too much to be anything but generous, and in so doing, he persuades us to be generous too.

6. "Network." There is nothing generous at all about Paddy Chayefsky's views on American television—the people who dish it out and the people who swallow it whole—in this flamboyant satire directed in galvanizing style by

Sidney Lumet. Like vodks, it leaves you breathless and a bit giddy. The film's method is to celebrate kmacy by forcing us to look at ourselves in the act of celebrating this film, which is eccentric, very, very sure of itself, and hugely funny. Satire, which used to be described as something that closes on Saturday night, is in this case one of the major hits of the year.

7. Sherlock Holmes. The only elementary thing about A. Conan Doyle's remarkable detective is the way he inspires the knaginations of each new generation that comes along. At this point we may be allowed to take for granted that in eight or 10 years there may be another Holmes incarnation on the screen. Right now we have the extraordinarily witty and winning "The Seven-Per-Cent Solution," directed by Herb Ross and adapted by Nicholas Meyer from his best-selling literary conceit that purports to reveal for the first time what happened when Holmes (Nicol Williamson) met the young Dr. Sigmund Freud (Alan Arkin). Movies like "The Omen" and the "King Kong" remake prompt suspicions that movies still are being made for 12-year-olds of all ages. Movies like "The Seven-Per-Cent Solution" restore our faith in the possibilities of mass entertainment movies. Among other things this one offers performances by Laurence Olivier and Robert Duvall that are as fine as any you've seen all year.

8. "The Memory of Justice." Marcel Ophuls's nearly five-hour meditation upon collective and individual political responsibility, using the Nuremberg trials as the starting point, is just as dramatically involving as his "The Sorrow and The Pity," but it may be tougher to take because the questions we must ask ourselves are beyond easy answers—and they still are there at the end. Ophuls has created a virtually new kind of documentary by allowing himself to pite up detail (in dozens of interviews) that simply cannot be accommodated in films of shorter length. Spellbinding.

9. Rainer Werner Fassbinder. He lives in West Germany, he's 30 and he's already made a couple of dozen feature films since his first in 1969, including four ("The American Soldier," "Beware of A Holy Whore," "Fox and His Friends" and "Fear of Fear"), which received limited showings in New York this year. Fassbinder hasn't yet had a commercial hit here, and I'm not sure when he will, but he's one of the most exciting and original oew talents at work today. Attention must be paid. The post-Godard generation is at hand.

10. Martin Scorsese's "Taxi Driver." The point of this film—that a psychosis can be successfully purged by running murderously amok for a few minutes—is, I think, debatable, but not the vivid talents of Scorsese, who directed "Taxi Driver," nor of Robert De Niro, who plays the title role. The best comment I heard about his film was that of a real-life taxi driver who told me that people who make slanderous movies about taxi drivers, like "Taxi Driver," should be taken out and shot.

more entertaining than the fiction. Hers is a classic Cinderella story. Elli Marcus, a fellow pupil at the Auguste-Victoria School in Berlin, recalls: "Marlene was the abyest girl in class. She was not outstanding at anything. She sat in the corner like a little gray mouse. Her only joy was the candy store across the street."

In 1919, she studied the violio at the Musik Konservatorium in Weimar. One of her classmates, Wolfgang Rose—Mahler's nephew—says. "Mariene was incredibly beautiful, even then. But she was modest, unawars of her looks, and uncertain of her talent."

After her futile period with Berthold Held, she took English lessons with Elsie Grace, an English woman who used to announce gleefully, as she began class, that she had been raped on her way upstairs. Eventually, she began working in cabarets and playing tiny film roles—as a trumpet player in a girl's dance band in "My Wife's Dancing Partner," with Welly Fritsch, and as a dizzy, monocled flirt in "Tragedy of Love," with Emil Jannings. The 94-year-old Genman star Mia May recalls that hy 1923 Miss Dietrich was already a Kurfurstendamm character. "She wore her monocle everywhere, and five red fox furs. People followed her in the streets."

She got her part in "Tragedy of Love" because she was the only girl in a long line of pretty applicants who had a dog with her. Everyone made such a fuss over the dog that all of the other auditioners went unnoticed.

She rapidly became well known on stage, appearing in plays by Wedekind, Shaw and even Shakespeare (in "The Taming of the Shrew," she was Widow to Elisabeth Bergner's Katharina, and she was Hippolyta in "A Midsummer Night's Dream"). She also enjoyed tremendous success with the angular, brilliant Margo Lion in the musical comedy "It's in the Air," and with Hans Albers in "Two Bow Ties," playing the voluptuous heiress to $30

It was around this time that Josef von Sternherg, nearing the peak of his Hollywood career, spotted her on stage and asked her to audition for the part of the wicked, money-hungry Lola-Lola and signed her for "The Blue Angel." "What will my mother think?" she asked a companion when she arrived, ravishing in astrakhan, at Berlin's UFA studios for a reading. "My family will be disgusted. Me playing

Angel" as Miss Dietrich's supreme triumph. Others are partial to "Morocco" or "Shanghai Express" or "Destry Rides Again" or "A Foreign Affair" or "Witness for the Prosecution." Not many moviegoers are familiar with the films she made before "The Blue Angel," however. When the Museum of Modern Art gave a restrospective of her work in the 1950's, the historian Richard Griffith put an asterisk alongside the hulk of the German titles and a footnote reading, "Miss Dietrich does not recall having made these films." It is as though she hlotted from her mind the image of these plump; jazzy, gemutlich figure who appeared so memorably in German films of the 1920's.

There was a particularly unforgettable moment in the 1929 film "I Kiss Your Hand Madame" which first signaled to the world the hirth of an extraordinary new screen personality. A fat man who is trying desperately to woo the aloof beauty says, "I'll; do anything for you, anything." She looks at him suggestively over a large hunch of roses he has bought and hriefly, cruelly, kindles his hope, "All right," she says finally, "You can take my dog for a walk."

.That same year, von Sternberg fashioned the image that was to become legendary, the image of a sensual, decadent blonde singing through clouds of cigarette smoke in an overcrowded dive, An amoral temptress in frilly pants, her gartered legs stretched seductively wide. Following "Blue Angel," she became a nightcluh singer in von Sternberg's "Morocco," a prostitute in "Shanghai Express," an unfaithful wife in Ernst Luhitsch's "Angel," and a jewel thief in Frank Borzage'a "Desire." In "Destry Rides Again"—the rowdy western comedy in which she made a comeback in 1939 after having been labeled hox-office poison by theater exhibitors-she was a saloon moll, a benign reversal of Lola-Lola in "The Blue Angel." In recent years, she has appeared on stage as a weary, amused, self-mocking cabaret entertainer in sequins and furs.

She was quite unlike any screen, heroine before her. She was neither clinging innocent nor heavy vamp; she was, instead, a cool, assured woman. She was at once desirable and elusive, seemingly soft but actually hard-as-nails. She aymbolized the free urban woman who chose her own men, earned her own living and saw sex not as a consolation hut as and the esthete. It was probably a mercy, then, that the nature of the Bicentennial both permitted and encouraged us to lavish most of our energies on recalling and uncovering the past. This worked better in some fields than in others, of course, in the visual arts, it proved to be a bonanza. This has been a great year for exhibitions of American arti Appropriately enough, Washington led the way with major exhibitions at the National Gellery of Art, the National Collection of Fine Arts, and the National Portrait Gallery. Indeed, we can count it as a significant achievement of the Bicentennial year that it saw the nation's capital so firmly established—and for the first time in our history, too-as a place where American art is not only honored on ceremonial occasions but seriously studied and explored as an ongoing function of our cultural life.

In the National Collection of Fine Arts, especially, we now have an institution—again, for the first time in our history—that takes all of American art as its scholarly province, and that acts in the most responsible and clear-minded way to enhance our understanding and appreciation of its many-sided accomplishments. It was the National Collection that gave us what I consider the most important of the Bicentennial surveys of American art—the comprehensive "America as Art" show, organized by Joshua C. Taylor, that was distinguished not only by its excellent and often unexpected choice of objects but by the effort it made to place these objects in meaningful relation to the experience and the ethos that had shaped them. Elsewhere the effort was more piecemeal, perhaps, but from Bos-ton and New Haven to Minneapolis and Los Angeles, the country was vividly reminded that it had a visual heritage of some distinction, a heritage worth treasuring and learning from, and this marked a distinct advance from the time, not so long ago, when the American act of earlier periods was widely condescended to in high places and often relegated to the storeroom and the auction block.

Is it because the present writer has been closest to the visual arts that what the Bicentennial produced in other fields has seemed a good deal thinner and less inspiring? Perhaps, But I doubt if even the most partisan champion of the American theater or American musical life could come up with list of American playwrights or American composers that can be said to represent accomplishments in any way equal to the work, say, of Gilbert Stuart and John Singleton Copley, of Thomas Cole and Thomas Eakins and

Winslow Homer, This placed the organizers of dramatic and musical events at a distinct disadvantage. Only in modern times have American playwrights and composers created works that might still, in 1976, hold the attention of an intelligent audience, and contribute something more than a sense of piety or nostalgia to our grasp of the American cultural past, Bicentennial events in the fields of drama and music had, perforce, to consist largely of modern revivals, The result was sometimes fun-even a creaky old machine like "The Royal Family" was good for more laughs than one quite expected but all too often, looking over the programs that were being offered up during the year, one had the feeling that it was not the Bicentennial of our country that was being celebrated but the history of show business in the 1920's and 1930's. Not a bad thing to celebrate, perhaps, but not quite what the occasion called for,

Oddly enough, the world of dance proved to have greater artistic resources at its disposal than the world of American drama, and being more practiced in the ways of repertory performance, was able to mount more works of real artistic substance than the dramatic theater. Both the American Ballet Theater and the Joffrey Ballet staged "American" seasons, something that no dramatic theater could conceive of doing on the same scale. Still, there was one sizable disappointment in the realm of dance. It: announced that George R would create in honor of the nial a full-evening ballet b Auduboo's "The Birds of Nort ca." sang "Mommy Will My Doggie Understand?"-this last while Mr. Carter was reporting on the Saudi Arabian inva-

When asked by a reporter why the sident was playing this music, Vice President Mondale replied: "I don't know. Perhaps be is appealing to the enduring values of the American people self-pity, unrequited love, and fear of the big city." It is a measure of our lack of preparedness that Mr. Mondale's response was taken to be witty when, in fact, it was shrewd.

During his first thousand days, in a series of free-wheeling and wideranging press conferences at county fairs and demolition derbies, Mr. Carter was heard to say: (1) "The poet seeks wisdom, which is the movement from event to knowledge; the statesman seeks action, which is the movement from knowledge to event": (2) "The artist tries to account for suffering; the statesman tries to diminish it"; (3) The trouble with the Surrealists was that they weren't sincere"; (4) "Twelve-tone music is bad for the ozone layer"; and (5) "Harold Pinter isn't funny."

Press secretary Jody Powell would not elaborate on these statements, but did tell the White Hoose press corps that they would be collected and published in book form for further study. In the middle of his January, 1978,

State of the Union message to Congress, the President paused dramatically to exhibit a nicture Amy had done for ber art class. It was supposed to be a person, and it looked like a tree. "Van Gogh," said Mr. Carter enigmatically. But, he told the nation, Amy's art teacher had criticized her drawing. Someone else's picture had been chosen to be posted on the bulletin board of the school. "Amy asked me if that was fair. I don't know if it is fair. If you believe in the American people, as I do, you must also believe that no American person is better than any other American person, it follows then that no art by any American person is better than any other art by an American person, All American arts are equal." He went on to discuss Yugoslavia's invasion of French Quebec.

In March, 1978, disguised as Austhetic Realists, squads of FBI agents entered the offices of Hilton Kramer, Pauline Kael, Jack Kroll and Alfred Kazin. and seized their adjectives. The Whife House released a brief statement: "Just as all art is by the self, all criticism

istration to gather material for books, it is now clear that the Carter people were as suspicious of Art, all along, as they were of every other elitism. Art with a capital "A" intimidated people. It was a scale by which people measured themselves, and found them-selves wanting. It made them feel inferior, dim, alarmed, depressed. What was needed was a noncritical, nonjudgmental, small "a" populist art, an art expressing the goodness and creetivity of the American people, an art that would do for our souls what microwave ovens do for our cooking.

And such a bomogenizing art did exist, although unacknowledged as such. It was the spontaneous art of the TV quiz show and the demonstra-tion against busing, of lotteries and graffith, of Bloomingdale's and night court, of therapy groups and obscene telephone calls, of the Playboy Forum and the practical joke. This equal art of access and inspiration-of opportunity and the creative union of the conscious and the meconscious—this frenzy of need and deed, was just what the populist doctors would have ordered for the body politic. It was, moreover, disposable, gone in a moment, immune to comparisons, beyond criti-

The Great Leap Forward into small "a" art began with cadres of ordinary, goodness-tilled, trustworthy critizens being dispatched to our major metropolitan areas to teach conductors and directors and curators and editors the error of their elitist ways: We are all sitists. It ended with a hootenamy of self-criticism in Philharmonic Hall.

us if one had to settle on the 10 most exciting and ant events of the season to date, the shift of Fisher on a horror to one of the important acoustic installation and a horror to one of the important acoustic installation and a horror to one of the important acoustic installation with the world would take priority. Not that the season-ked other unforgettable events. It started in Septembra is a double-barreled blast—the simultaneous epanings is day apart) in Washington and New York of two foreign opera companies—La Scala and the Paris Opera these days—grand opera, anyway—is pretty internationalized, with the same singers repeating ne casts everywhere. But even at that there were as—the soprano Margaret Price and the return of Freni, both with the Paris Opera; Solti as the "Figali "Otello" conductor for Paris (he has done relatively pera conducting in New York); the brilliant Scalara, and a company that included such fine singers chestras have been all over the place. The New York monic led everything off with its Mahler Month. first time in the United States all of the Mahler mes, plus a few other Mahler works, were presented continuous flow. Some might say overflow. There main those who dislike Mahler, but that has nothing with the imagination and enterprise that went into en there was the period where music lovers had recedented chance to snuggle up to the work of the world's greatest conductors. Within three weeks monic, Herbert von Karajan and the Berlin Philhape Georg Solti and the Chicago Symphony, Daniel him and the Orchestre de Panis, Bernard Hastink and ndon Philharmonic and Eugene Ormandy and the lphia Orchestra. Let's lump all these together as No. ur list. Even for New York this concentration was l. Georg Solti—"The alpha among today's superstar conductors."

Ten. The Wagner opera was directed by August Everding, brilliantly conducted by James Levine, and introduced the fine German tenor, René Kollo, to the New York operatic stage. The production, with sets by Ming Cho Lee and costumes by Peter Hall, had moments of haunting beauty and a pervading lyricism. Massenet's "Esclarmonde" starred Joan Sutherland. The production, directed by Lotfi Monsouri, with sets by Beni Montresor, perfectly captured the romantic, fairy-tale quality of the hig opera. Some thought the music too eclectic, but this listener loved every minute of it.

The Juillard School, too, had its operatic contribution to make, with the first American performance of Chabriet's "Le Roi malgré hui," sung in English. The cast was overmatched, but that did not hide the brilliance and originality of the music. Emmaunei Chabrier is a composer who deserves a much more thorough investigation than he has received.

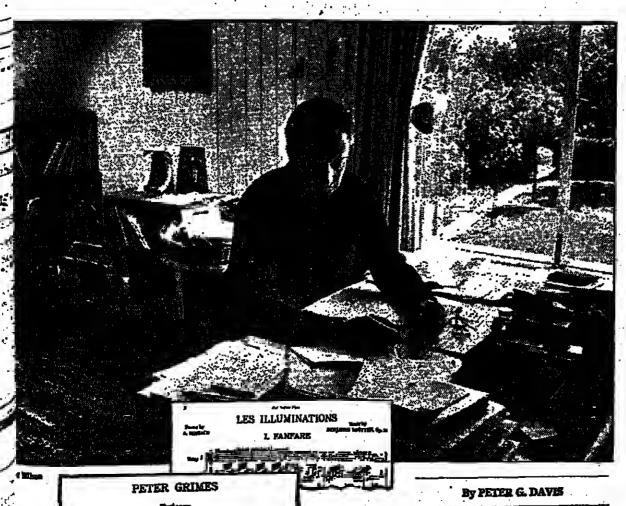

Good news on the season's front is the continuing health of the Chamber Music Society of Lincoln Center. Goodness knows there are chamber music groups everywhere, most of them industriously playing the Beethoven cycle, all of them doing valuable work, But CMSLC is something special, with its nucleus of top instrumentalists, the catholicity of the programs and the expertise of the delivery. Going to the Oct. 31 opening was like going home, sinking into a comfortable seat and relaxing, knowing in advance that everything is going to be smooth, happy, heart-warming.

Recitalists? All over the place, of course. This is New York, and any artist must conquer the city before he is internationally accepted. There have been some brilliant recitals so far, but Lazar Bennan's program, on which he played Schumann's F sharp minor Sonata and all 12 of Liszt's "Transcendenial Etudes," was one of the season's stoppers. The big, bearded, beadike Russian has taken over the city.

The man is a formidable planist, and in some respects not a fully formed one yet. His technique is stupendous, he can produce a melting sound (though sometimes he does bang a hit), he has all kinds of ideas—but sometimes his playing is provincial.

Much the same could be said of Emil Gileis and David Oistrakh on their first few swings through the West. They had not been exposed to the more sophisticated currents of musical thought outside the Soviet Union. It took about three seasons, and then their playing changed. There is no substitute for exchanging ideas face to face with international musicians. So it will be with Lazar Bennan. The chances are that in a few years he will not be playing Beethoven the way he currently does (indeed, one fervently hopes he will change his ideas about this composer); and even his specialty, Liszt, will probably have different pacings and emphases. Anyway he is a fearsome planist, capable of wringing an audience dry. New York has more than indicated he is welcome here any time.

Britten's Recordings Reveal His Artistic Versatility

KAREN. SHAW

WAR REQUIEM

REQUIEM AETERNAM

The composer introduced and recorded many of his works in Aldeburgh, the village where he lived.

The composer introduced introduced are composer—indeed, for him the wished, undoubtedly he could have become a conductor of international rank, but his appearances on the podium were generally confined to the annual Aldeburgh Festival in the English village on the North Sea coast where he lived and worked for most of his life. Fortunately, Britten made many recordings as pianist or conductor in some 50 of his own scores; all too infrequently, in works by other composers he admired. They are all valuable documents that add immensely to our knowledge of both his music and artistic ontlook.

"Document" is perhaps too dry a word to convey the vitality of a Britten performance. Unlike Stravinsky, who took up the baton late in life to correct what he considered misguided readings of his music by other conductors, Britten conducted because he loved direct contact with musicians and he had a natural gift for making music that needed no apology. His recordings stand very much on their own—in fact, one does not necessarily regard them as "authentic statements" but simply as performances, albeit exceptionally brilliant ones.

It's paradoxical that so shy and retiring an individual could invariably inspire an orchestra to play with such discipline and commitment. Of course he always worked with musicians he knew, and mutual respect between professional colleagues created an atmosphere in which everyone was expected to deliver something special. Britten's recording sessions never had much glamour or displays of temperament, but no one who ever attended them could miss their spirit of dedication or intensity of communication.

One reason for this rapport stemmed directly from Britten's music—he had an instinct, rare enough in any composer, of writing notes that give pleasure to the performer, no matter what his level of accomplishment. He composed to order and usually with specific musicians in mind, taking full advantage of the creative situation whether it involved a child striking a set of hand bells or a virtuoso cellist like Mstislay

The human voice was his favorite instrument and his vocal style was in large part influenced by one singer, Peter Pears, whose individual timbre and technique provided a lifelong inspiration. It's fascinating to study the music he wrote for this particular tenor over a period of 35 yt.us, how he exploited every part of the voice's range and expressive capacity.

One small example: Most tenors experience difficulty in adjusting to the register break around E and F, an area where Pears not only functioned comfortably but where his voice took on an especially haunting beauty. So, in "Peter Grimes," during the pub scene where Grimes bursts in from the storm half deranged and gripped by a vision, Britten begins the aria "Now The Great Bear and the Pleiades" on 23 incantatory E's. Other tenors may not thank him for this magnificent stroke, but coming from Pears's throat in the London recording, the dramatic and musical effect is spellbinding.

Singing and playing instruments is essentially a physical activity, and Britten's music as well as his recorded performances reflect this basic response, particularly with regard to their rhythmic life. This is an intuitive quality rather than something consciously cultivated, and one can hear the same kind of organic body pulse in the piano playing of Alicia De Larrocha or the singing of Maria Callas. It is an elemental underlying heartheart that sets all of the other musical facets in motion, a feature written into Britten's scores and one which he projects with an unforced naturalness in performance.

Take the Passacaglia interlude from "Peter Grimes," for example. Here a seven-note theme in the bass is repeated again and again, over which the rest of the orchestra weaves a braliant set of variations describing Grimes's disordered mental state. In Britten's recording, the character of the obsessive ostinato, in attack, stress, weight and resonant response, alters subtly and in direct proportion to the amount of instrumental density it must support, always propelling the music forward with a springing rhythmic pace: that other conductors rarely achieve. Another distinctive trait of Britten's musical personality, both as composer and conductor, was his ability to create a sound picture in which textures are vividly and precisely defined. Even critics unsympathetic to Britten's music granted him an uncanny sensitivity for drawing the most effective sonorities from whatever materials be had at hand, whether a small chamber combination or a symphony orchestra. As. s conductor he fully realized the sonorous potential of his own music (something not even Stravinsky was able to do), and he was equally successful inthis respect when dealing with composers as diverse as Mozart and Schumann -the way he clarified the muddy instrumentation of the latter's "Fanst" Overture, for instance, or bathed the slow movement of Mozart's G minor Symphony in a glowing textural luminosity.

The negative aspects of Britten's performing personality are remarkably few, although had he chosen to conduct

Here's to Those Who Come Back

a star, No irony, either, in having her play a Broadway star, for all of her early successes — "Liliom," "The Swan," name whatver you remember—had been Broadway successes. (And she'd once played with Ethel Barrymore; did you know that?)

But if Miss LeGallienne is identified with one thing rather than anotherand here we must begin to dabble in irony-it is with the movement to diversify Broadway, even, for as long as need be, to defect from Broadway. There came a time when the actress couldn't see why all plays had to be Broadway plays; you might even say she couldn't see why all plays had to be "The Royal Family." And so off to 14th Street, forsaking stardom and the ready-made, to found the Civic Rep, to do what wasn't being done, to change the climate and vary the menu. She'd begun the diaspora, deliberately, in 1926; much of her later life has been spent in helping put together, or work-ing with, similar companies. Fanny Cavendish wouldn't have done that; everyone knows Miss LeGalienne did.

I wonder what the actors thought as she glanced back down 45th Street -if she did glance back-before taking to the road with "Royal Family" later in the season? Did she think that her premise, at least, had won? For 45th Street this year is not the 45th Street of five years ago, or even three years ago, certainly not of 40 years ago. During the current year a trend that's been long in the making has solidified itself, changing the very nature of Broadway in the process. The theater that once went to 14th Street and that later created the beehive of Off Broadway for much the same purposes has succeeded in diversifying itself. And it has then turned around and marched back, its diverse wares in its arms, to take possession of the theater it left.

What's playing on 45th Street and where did it come from? Well, "Comedians" is from England, of course; nothing new in that. And "Pippin" is Broadway manufactured, though an institutional theater in Washington, D.C., had a hand in assuring its early survival. "For Colored Girls"? From an institutional theater on Lafayette Street downtown. "Godspell"? From Off Broadway, years and years ago. "Grease"? Ditto. "Your Arms Too Short to Box With God"? Workshop theater. And two that have closed, though their marquees stand as reminders, were sent in from regional sources: "Eccentricities of a Nightingale" and "Going Up."

I've mentioned 45th Street because it has the largest number of theaters; but the percentages can be duplicated. right across town, from "Chorus Line" "Shenandoah" to "Streamers" at Lincoln Center, There's been a revolution, and 1976 was the time of its formal recognition. The revolution hasn't been total, at last not in Miss LeGallienne's terms. Repertory, for instance, has never managed to persuade New York of its charms. And not all of the gifts from today's 14th Street, or points southwest, have been cooed over when unwrapped. In fact, two of the year's sharpest shocks came with the entirely unanticipated Broadway failures of Preston Jones's Texas Trilogy," born in Dallas, and Jules Feitler's "Knock Knock," bred and heleved on Sheridan Square, But it's only a couple of seasons since all such moves from downtown or from the outlands were considered risky if not downright unthinkable. Today the shuttle system is in full and swift operation. The diversity sought in breaking away from Broadway has become Broadway's life blood; having turned into the mainstream, it's turning up on

The balance of the year's most striking events were more nearly Fanny Cavendish events. The radiance of stars hasn't lost its allure since she or a Barrymore strolled up from Herald Square; the glow continues to pene-trate smog and all other forms of "unacceptable" atmosphere, saving many a day and many a play. Raiph Richardson and John Gielgud have been here, on lend-lease from Britain, to make the amiable difficulties of Harold Pinter's "No Man's Land" seem a mere game of cat's cradle, the easiest of fingerwork, The two men have rather specialized in playing chaps verging on second childhood of late. They themselves have scarcely escaped their first, working with the eagerness and simplicity of amateurs, though with the skill of concert virtuosos who have traded in their violins for verbs. Katharine Hepburn stopped by, long enough to see to it that those of us who very much wanted to see another play by Enid Bagnold might have the pleasure. The pleasure was compounded, nobly, by the realization that Miss Hephurn had matured as an actress once again; it's getting to be a habit

And Fanny Cavendish, who might easily have appeared in a play called "The Man Who Came Back" (1916; and don't revive it) would certainly have approved of The Men Who Came Back, or, to be more accurate, The Men Who Keep Coming Back. We have so steadily lost so many of our best large and small, that one scarcely expects a fled prodigal to return. One doesn't even look for a postcard. But two men who have made a practice of reappearing regularly, of truly dividing time between the claims of competing media, were and are with us once again this season, familiarly and without condescension. George C. Scott, who can make movies any time he wants to, is now leaping about the Broadhurst stage—the Broadhurst bed, I should say—in the tasseled cap and flapping nightgown of Volpone, rechristened "Sly Fox." though it's not all that long since he was here to pay his special, and very powerful, respects to Willy Loman, Meanwhile the end-lessly productive Neil Simon, whose work bubbles from him as from a mineral spring and who can make fun and money anywhere he wants to, has kept the faith and the franchise by providing us — as well as Tammy Grimes, George Grizzard and Jack Weston-with "California Suite." What are we to call these gentlemen who jump from coast to coast and form to form so faithfully, so adroitly? Jackrabbits doesn't seem quite right. How about They'd go down in any Royal Family's family album, I should think, as Good Boys. Would Richard Burton go down as a Bad Boy? Probably, be-cause he's incorrigible. He comes our way only once every 10 years or so, stuns his audiences with an experience of meaningful sound it's nearly forgotten, and then hies himself off to make films in which the particular gifts God gave him cannot possibly be used. Why two semi-careers when one walloping career could be had for the singing? Foolishness, foolishness. But he was in the vicinity during 1976, opening up "Equus" until it throbbed with great musical pain, and Broadway vibrated along with his vocal cords. There was vibration, too, during the early weeks of the year, as Irene Worth threatened to shatter glass and the audience's composure in "Sweet Bird of Youth." Later, Julie Harris stood alone in Amherst, shaking Emily Dickinson's head free of its oddest thoughts, lyrically, fiercely, transfixingly. The twelvemonth was not without its masters and mistresses.

Was it a good year for serious new American plays? Don't be silly. It was a year of some theatrical substance for all that, the kind of substance any Cavendish or the one Eva LeGailienne would understand and, I think, choose to savor.

Beckett Continues To Refine His Vision

-By MEL GUSSOW

amuel Beckett continues on his course of distillation, reducing art to easence. He has never wasted movement or words—he can say more with less than any other contemporary writer—but his most recent plays are even shorter, more austere, more intense. In "Not I" (presented in 1972 at Lincoln Center), a character is represented by a mouth—a woman's crimson lips, spotlighted, trapped in a frenzied confession. "That Time" and "Footfalls," his two newest plays, which received their American premiere in the Kreeger Theater at Washington's Arena Stage (the brief run ended last week), are equally spare and pure, a further refining—and defining—of this supreme artist's stark vision.

In "That Time," the head of a man, surrounded by a corona of white hair, appears to be floating, disembodied, in space, Occasionally, the eyes open and close. The man hreathes, but the head is largely immobile. The man is silent, but we hear his voice, emerging from three different places on the stage. Each voice reminds him of a crucial, even traumatic, moment in his life. One tells about a ruin of a building where he hid as a child and to which he returned as an adult. The second describes a day in an endless wither when he took shelter from the rain in a musty museum and found himself along with "portraits of the dead." The third is a pastoral idyl of love in the radiant sun.

Childhood, education or history, romance—the three stories flow through the hlackness of the stage until they become a tapestry of memory. Is the man dead, dying, sleeping? We never know—and perhaps neither does he Ritualistically he keeps telling himself "old tales to keep the void from pouring in" on top of him. He is a man entombed in the abyss of his life.

aged woman, old and worn beyond her years, paces the stage, nine steps then turnabout. She also walks in her mind, talking to her aged, sick mother (who talks but does not appear). The woman's story is mysterious. She has not been outdoors since childhood. She is a drudging nurse to her mother's infituative and she is also knotted to her own past. Something—we never find out what—has stained her, has consigned her to this carefully measured existence. "Will you never have done revolving it all in your mind?"

Both plays are interior monologues. The words seem to tumble directly from the sphconscious. They seem disoriented, but, listening, wafted on a lyrical tide of images, we find an order and a poetry. Each play is a litary of the elusiveness of remembrance. Why do we remember certain moments and forget others? What draws the curtain on our memory screen? These anguished souls, enduring the redundancy of their days, seek in their past for anchors. These are night plays, dark draws in which past, present and future are intertwined.

The plays—strange, hypnotic exquisite — are organically with Beckett's other works, man in "That Time" is an Krapp, except in this case tape recorder is in his mind and nothing mechanical or even stage—playing back an exception. He tries to understand the playing back an exception of turning points, to find a Continued on Bace 27.

From Punk Rock to The Big Comebacks

t has become fashionable in year-end pop-music roundups of late to lament the state of the ert. Pop music isn't what it used to be, we read. It's been another limp year. This observer has never been very sympathetic to such mostalgist defeatism. Of course pop music, along with most manifestations of the youth cultism of the 1960's, has lost some of its more apocalyptic, societally redeeming connotations. Pop music is unabashedly entertainme now, and perhaps partly as a result the best pop music doesn't speak so compellingly for its times as it used to. But there is still an enormous amount of skill, emotion and charm being invested in the form, and people still legitimately derive great pleasure from

That said, 1976 was not a great year, even for 1970's pop. There was nothing of the impact of the 1975 Rolling ones tour or the first months of Bob Dylan's Rolling Thunder Revue. Most of the trends that continued to prosper had come along earlier-punk rock, disco, salsa, reggae.

Still in assembling a list of 10 key people, trends, concerts and events, one realizes that, as ever, there was a lot to remember with affection and inter-

1. Without any doubt the pop-music event of the year was Stevie Wonder's album, "Songs in the Key of Life." In a gratifying instance of the congruence of popular taste and critical opinion, it went straight to the top of the album sales charts and has stayed there ever since. Wonder is the most fecund creator in popular music these days, and a masterly singer and instrumentalist as well. The set has its self-indulgences, but they pale before its achievements and the sheer joy it transmits.

2. Wonder's album followed a 26month-histus for him, and hence constituted something of a comeback. 1976 was in fact a year for comebacks. The most dramatic was Laura Nyro's, but Melanie made a welcome new album. John Cale put a band together and Jonathan Richman and the Modern Lovers emerged from years of cultism and confusion with a long-delayed release of some old studio tapes and a nearly-as-charming new album. But the best comeback of all was Jeni Mitchell's. Not that she had really gone anywhere in terms of fame, But her new "Hejira" album reaffirmed her slightly shaky status as the leading singersongwriter of the day, irrespective of

3. Another comback of sorts was Paul McCartney's. McCartney had his No. 1 records before his 1976 summer tout, but these were his first performances in this country since the last live Beaties concerts in 1966, and they were remarkably appealing. One says "remarkably" because the music—now available in a three-disk tour albumwas tougher and more convincing than the popsier studio albums. McCartney never did efface memories of the Beatles, and his tour provoked the most ise, wishful rumors yet about an eventual Beatles reunich. But on his own terms, he staked out a convincing claim as the most talented of all the

4. The most interesting of all the trends one could discern was the growworld-wide interest in "punk rock." What that really meant was not so much a return to 1950's hoodlumism as a clearing away of "progressive" ness and middle-of-the-road bathos and going back to the rhythm-and-bines basics at the roots of rock. The most appealing of all the figures to emerge so far in this category was Graham Parker from London. New York's punk-rockers tend to be mixed artiness (Patti Smith, Talking Heads, the Ramones) which has its genuine charms but which sometimes takes the music and the image rather far from punk primitivism. Closer really to the true punk-rock spirit are such midwestern perennials as Bob Seger, who himself made an appealing bid for a nationwide appreciation with a fine live album and an even finer studio album

5. A negative development, but one sadly symptomatic of the music business, was the non-happening of Bruce Springsteen in 1976, It would be easy to be cynical and say that the massive publicity Springsteen received in 1975 more frequently he would undoubtedly have encountered less adaptable orchestras and a repertory system that would have forced him to program pieces for which he had little liking (Beethoven and Brahms were especially low on his list of priorities). One valid ground for complaint is his emotional restraint, a tendency to shy away as a phrase approaches its logical climax. This inhibition was very much part of his character as an intensely private person and it also colors his own music -such cathartic moments as his setting of the Shakespeare sonnet in "Nocturne," the final pages of the "War Requiem" or the conclusion of "Death in Venice's are comparatively rare. He compensated in other ways, rather like another composer-conductor whom he closely resembled, Pierre Boulez.

Britten's Recordings

Britten was also a gifted planist, mostly as an accompanist for Peter Pears and occasionally as a soloist (London should consider reissuing his 1956 performance of Mozart's Piano Concerto, K. 414-a stunning performance according to those fortunate enough to possess the original 10-inch English Decca disk). The same qualities of rhythmic vitality and crystalline textures that distinguish his conducting are even more apparent in Britten's work at the keyboard where he is in direct and immediate contact with the instrument. Unhappily there is relatively little of his piano playing of other composers' music on disk, although possibly the inevitable memorial issues will correct this in the near future. The major item available at the moment is the Pears-Britten recording of Schubert's song cycle "Die Winterreise," and no planist, not even Gerald Moore, illuminates so much poetic detail in this lovingly fashioned interpretation.

For the past 10 years or so, Britten made his recordings in and around Aldeburgh where most of his new works received their premieres. This was in part an accommodation by Decca-London because the composer disliked traveling and it made the often arduous process less of a strain, Although be recognized the importance of the medium and willingly adapted to the complexities of modern stereophonic recording procedures, Britten submitted to them rather like a stoic child taking his medicine. This observer was lucky enough to be on hand in 1967 to watch him tape "The Burning Fiery Furnace," the composer's second parable opera which was recorded in the small 12thcentury Norman church in Orford, a town bordering Aldeburgh, Britten suffered the ordeal of a full week away from composition while he recorded this hour-long dramatization of Nebuchadnezzar and the three Israelites who miraculously survived the King's punishment by fire.

The recording was produced by John Culshaw, well known for his elaborate "sonic sound stage" production of Lor-don's "Ring" cycle. Each evening be-fore the next day's session, Culshaw and Britten hammered out the technical problems involved in recording this ritualistic mystery play. At one point in the opera, the chamber orchestra joins the action in a ceremonial march around the nave, and Culshaw wanted ground microphones to catch the light tread of the musicians as they moved past the listener. The idea appealed to Britten, whose suggestions for exact mike placement were actually adopted during the recording.

While watching the session, it was difficult to see how any musician could concentrate on the real business at hand amid the general confusion. In lieu of a modern, fully equipped studio, Decca's engineers set up shop in a di-lapidated cow shed some 100 yards from the church, snaking wires around tombstones through the ancient parish cemetery and into the sanctuary. Not only that, BBC television had sent in a full crew of technicians to videotape the proceedings as part of a documentary film on the Aldeburgh Festival and its composer-director. The cast and instrumentalists were easily outnumbered 4 to 1 by the media-like it or not, by 1967 Britten had become a British cultural landmark and every move was being preserved for posterity.

Amidst all this, Britten worked calmly and methodically, correcting baiances, catching tiny musical errors, putting at ease two boy sopranos who sang the parts of acolytes with an avuncular remark, and coordinating every aspect of the performance. At one point, when Peter Pears, who sang Nebuchadnezzar, found a high C flat in his part proving somewhat recalcitrant, Britten gallantly called for "a new score-immediately." Although said in jest, one had the feeling that he might very well have rewritten the passage on the spot if Pears had not solved the difficulty himself (interestingly enough, the subsequent printed score does present a lower alternative).

The recorded performance reflects none of these tense working conditions, only a community of musicians involved with bringing a piece of musical drama to life, "As an artist, I want to serve the community," Britten once wrote. "I belong at home—there—in Aldeburgh.-I have tried to bring music to it in the shape of our local festival; and all the music I write comes from it. I believe in roots, in associations. in background, in personal relationships. I want my music to be of use to people, to please them, to enhance their lives . . ." In their special way, Britten's many recordings will continue to do just that in towns and cities far from Aldeburgh for years to come.

to his legend. Maybe it might have, but he never got the chance to try. His live concerts, the few there have been, were as fine as ever, and even gave tantalizing signs of artistic growth. But Springsteen is tied up in a messy legal battle with his manager, and it has curtailed his touring and

6. A fascinating phenomenon in 1976 was the continued ability of the public to make stars independently of both the radio stations and the press, Albums would enter the charts, rise to whatever position the artists' previous success might have seemed to entitie them, sit there for awhile, and then erratically rise to the top and stay ere, sometimes fading back to the No. 2 or 3 spot and then returning to No. 1. On a scale just short of No. 1 this happened with such unknown bands as Boston and Heart, More strikingly it happened to both Fleetwood Mac and Peter Frampton, both of whom moved from stardom to huge superstardom, surprising everyone including themselves in the process. Of the two,

the more obviously worthy was Fleetwood Mac, largely because of the bewitching singing of a new member, Stevie Nicks.

7. The various "new" trends that were meant to supplant or enrich standard white pop and rock in 1976 suffered disparate fates, Reggae, after years of trying, finally made a marked commercial impact on mainstream music, mostly through Bob Marley, who closed out the year dramatically by avoiding what was apparently an assassination attempt in Jamaica and proceeding the next day to go through with a previously scheduled mass outdoor concert there, Disco continued to grow on a commercial level, and began to show signs of stretching beyond the simplistic formulas that have both defined and limited it so far. Chief among the innovators was Dr. Buzzard's Original Savannah Band, although they haven't been able to translate their success into a live show so far. Salsa, on the other hand, shows every sign of remaining a music of the barrio, although here—as in the pest—Latin music has been able to merge with more accessible forms of lazz, rock and

8. On the concert front there were two particularly rewarding evenings. In January, shortly after Harold Melvin and the Blue Notes broke up, the two factions appeared in head-to-head confrontation in New York. At the Felt Forum were Melvin and some remaining Blue Notes. Over at Radio City Music Hall Theodore Pendergrass, the group's former lead singer, appeared with the other Blue Notes, Pendergrass won the war hands down, and one hopes he manages to get a solo career

9. The most striking and, in a sense, unexpected success was David Bowie's Nassau Coliseum concert (those who saw the same show a few days later at Madison Square Garden said it wasti't so effective there). Bowie always has been so artful and self-absorbed that his performances have seemed stilted, But on Long Island it all came together for him and the cold, white intensity of the night will long be waves. We focus our eyes again until the head becomes a sculpture, an icon. "Footfalls" we perceive through the half-light. The stage is dim, the woman's face shrouded by shadows. We see her feet, follow her path and hear her padding steps. The woman's tread is so insistent that it creates its own music-a dirge. It is as if she is walking on her own grave. Just as every movement—the opening of an eye in "That Time", a turnabout in "Footfalls" - is consequential, the smallest sound can be monumental, and the ringing of chimes becomes cosmic.

I saw the plays in their world premiere engagement at the Royal Court

Theater in London earlier this year during a season of Beckett, with the author himself directing "Footfalls." At the Arena Stage, Alan Schneider, who is Beckett's watchman as director in America, is particularly fortunate in his choice of Donald Davis for "That Time." This Canadian actor, who played the title role in the first New York production of "Krapp's Last Tape," has a marvelously rich voice, with the resonance of an Orson Welles. He is able to modulate his tone so that one can readily distinguish among the three voices in the dark: three instruments playing different songs in har-

In London, "Footfalls" was played by the unmatchable Billie Whitelaw. It is a role that requires little acting in the traditional sense, but in the stoop of her body and ber movement on stage, Miss Whitelaw managed to suggest the infinite anguish of this tormented woman. Doubled over almost into a right angle, shrouded in rags, Dianne Wiest seems, somehow, less personal. But she is effective (as is Sloane Shelton, the third performer) and Mr. Davis is exceptional. The lighting and sound are precise. Mr. Schneider's production is an authentic recapitulation of the original.

At the Arena as at the Royal Court, the two new short pieces were presented in company with Beckett's earlier "Play." Written in the early 1960's, "Play" has aged into a classic. It is one of Beckett's most frequently performed and accessible works. Though the setting is unearthly-three people in funeral urns, their heads so encrusted they look like decayed corpses—the story is easily identifiable. This is a love triangle—a man, his embittered wife and the other woman. Each recites a monologue, individually and overlapping, the speech triggered by a shifting beam of light as interrogator.

With its pungent cross-currents of insults and marital discord, "Play" has many taughs, but never before has it actually seemed a comedy. As staged by Mr. Schneider, this is a comic curtain-raiser to the unforgettable human agonies of "That Time" and "Footurricanes, deaths, discoveries and several conflicting trends marked the year in photography as seen from New York City. In the museums and galleries a growing number of important shows crowded the calendar, some of which created heated controversy. The likeliness of the photographic scene this year makes it easy to cite ten outstanding events and developments.

Photography Found a Home In Art Galleries

First on my list was the striking presence of photography in major art galleries that formerly showed only painting and scalpture. In the fall of 1976 Knoedler, Mariborough and Sidney Jam's each opened the season with big exhibitions of photographs. Since none of them showed photographs as recently as three years ago, this says something about the new position of photography among the arts.

I'd put second on my list the opening of new galleries devoted exclusively to photography. In New York City these included the Rinhart Gallery, 818 Madison Avence, opening with a show of photographs by Timothy O'Sulivan; Images, at 11 East 57th Street, which specializes in color photography; and the Marcuse Pfeiffer Gallery, 825 Madison Avenue, opening with a Weegee exhibition. · I'd put as third and fourth the evidence of two opposing trends. One is the renewed attention to human interest photography, as seen in Knoedler's opening exhibition, devoted to the works of veteran Life photographer Alfred Eisenstaedt; Mariberough's large show of pictures of low life in Paris in the 1930's by Brassal; and Sidney Janis's display of Duane Michals's photographic portraits and name-

The contrary trend, fourth on my list, is the movement towards formalistic photography, most evident at The Museum of Modern Art. For several years now the Modern has assidnously courted the kind of photographic formalism that is the entithesis of human interest photography. In 1976 the courtship was consummated with two big exhibitions featuring two different kinds of formalistic photography. The current (through February 6, 1977) Harry Callahan exhibition exemplifies the older type, which was invented by Paul Strand in response to the challenge of modern painting. . In the older formalism, rocks, roots and other hits of nature are framed and printed in such a way as to emphasize their abstract shapes and colors. Callahan practices a peculiarly refined and elegant version of this.

A newer kind of photographic formalism was exemplified by the snapshot-like work William Eggleston showed in his summer exhibition at the museum. Eggleston, like other young formalists, has abandoned the tennous connections the older formalists had with School of Paris painting. to find inspiration in the photographic process itself. The theory is that photographs that look like photographs are better than photographs that look like paintings, and that photographs that look like snapshots or police lineup mug shots or 19th-century commercial record shots or some other form of vernacular photography are the best of all, especially if the photographs they look like were made by someone with no artistic pretensions whatsoever. Eggleston's photographs strongly resemble the color slides made by the man next door, and his show at the Modern was the most bated show of the year.

Fifth on my list is another trend, observable outside the Modern and those three major art galleries: the growing interest in the turn-of-the-century pictorialist photographers, whose soft-focus tonalism was once anotherna to sharp-focus n architecture, there is no Off Broadway. An important building costs millions, and like an expensive show, the investment rides on established reputations. The big building jobs go to the big names and the big firms, There is just too much money involved.

But there is more to architecture than establishment practice, and there are other places to look for its vital signs. Architecture is really a schizophrenic art, existing on two levels. The major structures—those that command the widest attention and praise—are almost always skillful, poiished works of a kind acceptable to enlightened and affluent clients. At another level are the younger or more heretical talents, more closely tied to the art and intellectual worlds. They build little or build small, bot make waves. Since there is no equivalent of experimental or repertory workshops for architecture, they tend to write and talk a lot.

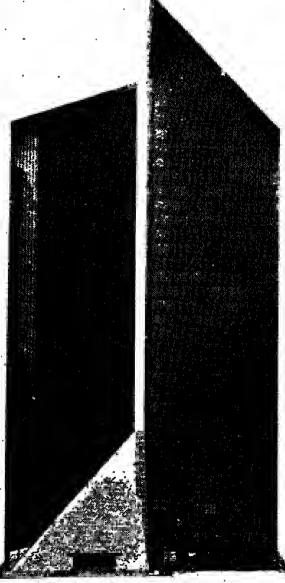

Both levels are manifestly influential. The first, or es tablished brand of building, creates a vast spinoff of both competent and deplorable commercial work; nothing except haute couture gets knocked off faster than a successful architectural style. This is the construction that determines much of the built world as we see and know it.

The second level, unfamiliar to the general public, usually represents architecture's immediate future, pushing the present. This is where the theory and philosophy of the art of architecture are developed and new styles are born. Although this is a kind of ferment that cannot be seen on city streets, it has a profound effect on establish-

To reduce these incestuously vitalizing currents to a list of architectural events of the year is a risky enterprise. But if one wishes to indulge in such an exercise, the Pennzoil Building in Houston, hy Philip Johnson and John Burges, could be No. 1, as a pretty good "building of the year," although it is actually no more a "pure" 1976 product than any other major construction. With its completion it has achieved the kind of visibility and publicity that makes it an architectural event. The building becomes a "statement" that the public recognizes—a critical bridge between the art of architecture and its popular use and understanding.

Mr. Johnson, who has just turned 70, is incontestably super-establishment. But his sharp intellect has always been directed to what is new, challenging, stimulating and provocative—the thoughts and events that represent the frontier of his art.

With the Pennzoil Building the establishment and experimental architectural levels meet. Its twin towers are an experience in a kind of giant, minimal abstraction, tremendously effective in their scale and artfuloess, offering a complex and shifting geometry subject to kinetic and esthetic transformations through stunning changes of movement and light. This is significant skyline sculpture as well as a successful commercial container. It is at this point of synthesis of form and purpose that building becomes art.

The second building or event, on the list is New York's best new skyscraper in years, by the establishment firm of Kevin Roche, John Dinkeloo and Associates, This is the building at One United Nations Plaza put up by the United Nations Development Corporation.

The tower's suave mirror skin breaks many of the rules on which modern architecture is based. It is a brilliant and somewhat perverse design, with a deliberate trompe Poeil scale for its exterior elements combined with an arbitrary form that turns the structure into more of an esthetic "object" than an indicator of its functions. The result is giving orthodox modernists fits, while setting new development patterns.

1976 is also the year they got all the windows back the John Hancock Building in Boston, by I. M. Pel and Partners, which gives us event No. 3. For several previous years the windows blew out and lawsuits piled up in an architectural debacle paralleling the collapse of Beauvais Cathedral or the slow slide of Pisa's tower. The results

The boarded-up eyesore on Copley Square, which can surely be nominated as one of the all-time wrong buildings in the wrong place, has turned out to be Boston's most besotiful new construction—a slender, sleek, mirror-glass tower with more refinement and elegance than anything else in town. Call it the architectural irony of the year.

Two other Pei works in construction now are events of a different nature. The impressive Dalias Government Center and the new East Wing of Washington's Nationel Continued on Next Page was the formation of a dance consortium to run the City Center 55th Street Theater. This consortium consists of the Joffrey Ballet, the Ailey company, the Ellot Feld Ballet and Ballet Theater. This group is making itself responsible to book the theater and to provide it with as many weeks work as possible. No one—least of all the four companies primarily concerned—believes that the old City Center is the answer to a dancer's prayer, but it is e bome, and ft is available. It remains to be seen how the plan works out. Obviously, Ballet Theater is seeking closer links with the Metropolitan Opera House, Alley has its eye on the State Theater, and Feld has another bome in Joseph Papp's Public Theater. Still, the consortium might work, particularly if the theater can act as host to visiting companies.

Number Seven. Over the years, together with their regular guest star Rudolf Nureyev, the National Ballet of Canada has become one of New York's most frequent dance visitors. And the company founded by Celia Franca has, partly through the assistance of Mr. Nureyev and Erik Bruhn, slowly developed into an important troupe. This year it acquired a new artistic director in Alexander Grant, the great British character dancer who retired after 30 years with the Royal Ballet. Mr. Grant started his regime with a welcome revival, the first in North America, of Ashton's "La Fille Mal Gardée," and more Ashton revivals are promised. Mr. Grant's next problem is to encourage new choreography, and for this he will need all the luck in the world.

Number Eight. Paul Taylor, after one of his most successful seasons ever (following his unannounced but fairly evident retirement as a dancer, his choreography has blossomed even further), was forced by economic circumstances to dissolve his company. Nor was he crying "Wolf!" He had just reached the end of the line. People rallied to his assistance, and a tour was patched together, but the future of this great company is still shaky. An event of 1976? I think so, because it shows how frail, how delicate, how vulnerable some of our greatest artistic institutions really are.

Number Nine. So they finally did it. Ever since 1946, Lucia Chase and Oliver Smith, architect-directors of Ballet Theater, bave wanted to mount a properly lavish production of Petipa's "The Sleeping Beauty." This season they got their wish. It was steged by Mary Skeaping and based closely on that same 1946 version by Britain's Royal Ballet that first inspired Chase and Smith—even the designs by Oliver Messel had been reproduced. The first performance was danced by Natalia Makarova and Mikhail Baryshnikov. Revisions to the production were made this mooth by Sir Robert Helpmann for the Kennedy Center, but the work will survive and gain in luster.

Number Ten. Once again I intend to cheat. My last event is "The Spirit of Denishawn" program staged by the Denishawn teacher, Klarna Pinska, and performed by Joyce Trisler's Danscompany. The program, which was fascinating. was evidence of the growing need to examine some of the grass roots of American dance. Alvin Ailey has been working in this direction, people have been reexamining work of pioneers such as Isadora Duncan, and there seems to be a new awareness that if we are to preserve anything of our dance heritage we must act instantly, before all the traditions fade. But this presentation also revealed something else. The program started at the Theater of the Riverside Church and was moved to the Roundabout Theater. Both of these organizations—the Roundabout, with its so-called "Dance Umbrella" program, in particular—are providing modern-dance with new bomes in New York, Together with the Brooklyn Academy of Music and Its most ambitious

Next on the list is a kind of group event, the peripherally visible, quietly influential, smaller constructions of the practitioners of "new" esthetic. Their work is found in rather recondite pastures and hilltops from Connecticut to California and in all of the architectural journals. To name names without differentiating in detail is to invite contumely, but at the opposite poles of this practice are the pristine abstractions of Richard Meier and the elite eclecticism of Venturi and Rauch. This work is cerebral, special, significant and often quite beautiful. Its practitioners wage endless paper polemical battles about post-modernism and post-functionalism (yes, they are different). That brings us to the second half of our enumerati of the 10 most influential happenings of the year, and we move from people and buildings to trends, No. 6 on this is the museum explosion. ### From Outrageous 'Mary Hartman' to Impressive Imports ummaging through the massive amount of material spewed from the electronic maw in 1976, the indefatigable student may be surprised to find many of the year's more signifi-cant developments falling outside the hallowed territory of prime time. Fads and personalities grabbed more attention than programs, which is perhaps understandable, given the general level of the normal weekly schedule. Newspapers, magazines and assorted pamphlets, in terms of newsprint and photo layouts, gave their hearts to two TV women: Mery Hartman, the fictional housewife from mid-America, and Berbara Walters, the NBC co-host raised to the dizzying level of million-dollar-a year ABC co-anchorperson. Here, then, are ten keys to

With tongue io cheek and at least one or two toes in mouth, "Mary Hartman, Mary Hartman" went into syndication, after having been rejected by the networks. The show ettempted to work on two levels: straight soap opera and, for the more sophisticated, parody of soap. opera. It was outrageously bilarious enough to become the most talked about series of the year. But Norman Lear, the producer, hed problems. No one was really dumb enough to take this nuttiness as straight anything. And, in typical self-destruct fashion, the lunacy required constant escalation. Where do you go after Grandpa is arrested as the town "flasher"? Well, the series is currently toying with bisexuality, wife-beating, masochism and penis transplants. At the end of the first season, Mary had a nervous breakdown and Louise Lasser still appears to be recovering. Meanwhile, she is giving one of the more monotonous and irritating performances perpetrated on the tube. Mary has witted disastrously, and the program's faddishness has peaked.

Miss Walters, on the other hand, is still recovering from coverage overkill. The ABC Evening News, which she co-anchors with Harry Reasoner, has dropped back to its usual last place in the network news race. But the recent "Berbara. Walters Special," featuring interviews with Barbra Streisand and Jimmy Certer, did extremely well in the ratings. While rumors about her future continue in circuletion, Miss Walters now enters a period of sustained testing and proving.

If womeo dominated the beadlines, men contioued to dominate the broadcasting indostry. The most dramatic example of one-man rule, a disappearing institution in an age of complex conglomerates, was provided by William S. Paley, chairman of CBS, who stunned the company and its competitors by suddenly firing Arthur R. Taylor as president. Also at CBS, Daniel Schorr, the abrasive, determined journalist, was let go following a confrontation with Congress about classified documents. His departure may or mey not have had something to do with the fact that he had the temerity to question Mr. Paley directly on a story involving CBS.

Elsewhere, in the area of news, the Presidential dehates and the pre-election Presidential forums, both under the aegis of the League of Women Voters, were praised, reviled and picked apart down to the last trivial detail of how a giass of water was positioned on the podium. The forms appear here to stay; with luck, the surrounding hoopla may diminish with familiarity. Meenwhile, network news stuck to predictable formats. The magazines-CBS's "60 Minutes" and NBC's "Weekend"-continued to monopolize the hrighter pieces. And the most effective documentary wes constructed on the most basic principles of solid journalism. Jay McMullen's "The Selling of the F-14," for CBS News, painstakingly documented the ties between United States aircraft companies and Mideastern wealth.

Then, there is entertainment programming, the recognized staple of the television diet. It was not a vintage year for commercial TV. The biggest audience ever for a network presentation, amounting to 110 million viewers, was garnered by NBC with "Gone With the Wind," a. film made in 1939. Among more recent productions there were a number of fine performances: Jane Alexander as Mrs. Roosevelt in "Eleanor and Franklin" (ABC), Rip Torn as Walt "Whitman in "Song of Myself" (CBS) and Sally Field as "Sybil." The original fun of "Rich Man, Poor Man" (ABC) beld out some promise for the limitedserial form. And some special productions-"Helter-Skelter" and "Land of Hope" (both CBS), and "Scottsboro Boys" and "Sybil" (both NBC)—were well above average in ambition and execution. But the overall network picture was lackluster. CBS's venerable "Camera Three," hidden away oo Sunday mornings, managed to be more consistently distinguished with, among other things, portraits of Noel Coward, Stephen Sondheim and Philip Johnson.

By far the most important dramatic series of the year could be found on public TV. "Visions," produced by Barbara Schultz cut of Los Angeles station KCET, is offering a series of works written specifically for television. The even; seriously flawed in so the project commands continuing respect. With a determinetion rare for TV since the so-called golden age of the medium's years, the focus is being kept on the writer, who is allowed to be as provocative or experimental as talent will allow, "Visions" has scored beautifully with such productions as "The War Widow," "Liza's Pioneer "Two Brothers" and "Life Amoog the Lowly." It dares to be serious, something more than slick. If "Visions" is allowed to die, as present funding plans indicate, it is not the series but the entire purpose of public TV that will have to be questioned.

In general, public TV continued to serve the cause of quality programming well. WNET's Dance in America series has evolved into m. outstanding showcase for dance companies, most notably in a splendid 90-minute produc-tion devoted to the art of Martha Graham. Theater in America" remained impressive as if moved beautifully from Tennessee Williams's "Eccentricities of a Nightingale" to Eugene O'Neill's "Ah, Wilderness!". And the new "Live From Lincoln Center" project demonstrated that it had the technology and initelligence needed to broadcast live performances of "Swan Lake" or Andre Wetts, the pianist. Pittsburgh station WQED had the gumption to produce an excellent portrait of an outspoken Harry S. Truman in "Plain Speaking," starring Ed Flanders. And Boston's WGBH provided a memorable exploration of death in Edgewant and Comments of the Comm documentary called, simply, "Dying."

Finally, with all of the broadcasting hoople in honor of the nation's bicentennial year, it was left to WNET's The Adams Chronicles" to provide a series of permanent substance. With research, production time, intelligence and much money, American television proved it could equal those impressive serials with pronounced British accents.

And then there were the imports, those negging reminders from chroad that TV can be something more than a landscape littered with sit come and action adventures. WOR/Channel 9 turned over an entire week of its evening time to Thames TV, a commercial deganization in Britain. The standard Thames production was as bad as its stand-ard American counterpart, but the specials—in particular, The Naked Civil Servant, the bingraphy of an outra-geously effeminate homosexual—were infinitely money special. In addition, there was public TV's standard meni of imports. Masterpiece Theater had the Scottish Sunse Song" and the Welsh "How Green Was My Velley," both beautiful, productions. WNET is currently showing "The Fight Against Slavery," a fastinating series shout Britain's iovolvement in the slave trade.

Quality in network programming for children ge remained isolated in the special alots of ABC's "After-school Specials," NBC's "Special Treats" and CBS's "Young Peoples Festivals." Only public TV made an effort to expand in the area of regular children's programming. "Rebop," a series of yignettes about young people across the United States, is among the better of the newer projects. Another is "Once Upon a Classio," which is, almost pre-dictably, air import. Its BBC productions of "The Prince and The Pauper" and "Heidi" have been first-rate

No review of a TV year would be complete without. trying to purpoint, if only for Jubite comparisons, some of the worst productions offered for mass consumptions. Among the series, aficionados will doubtlessly agree of Among the series, ancionados will doubtlessly agree of "Ball Four" and "Spencer's Pilots" (CBS), "Mr. T. and Tina" (ABC) and "Baz Baz Black Sheep" (NBC). As for the specials, CBS had Mary Tyler Moore in her incredibly pretentious "Incredible Dream," while NBC was saddled with "The Big Party," the live "big event" that immediate the pear's biggest fizzle, and "Cat on a Het Tin Boots. as filtered through British TV and the opaque performances of Natatie Wood and Robert Wagner.

Radio's Oasis Of Live, Serious Music

By DAVID GRUNWALD

t was close to midnight. David Rubinstein, a young concert planist, glancednervously about the stark radio broadcasting studio with its white walls and gray art deco lights, the clutter of music stands and boom mikes, the wall clock moving ever closer toward the moment when be would go on the airlive, Ruhinstein had performed over radio in Europe, but at this late hour the 27-year-old New Yorkar was customarily at home in bed asleep. He walked over to the concert grand that filled the far corner of the studin, removed two styrofoam cups of cold coffee, sat down and began to practice.

Then he was introduced to the host of WQXR's "Artists In Concert," Judith Kurz, a young singer who does the orchestral booking and publicity for Young Concert Artists, Rubinstein and Miss Kurz weot over the night's program: Mozart's Soneta No. 16 in B Flat Major, works by Chopin, Liszt, Ravel.

Just before air time, Rubinstein asked that the studio be cleared except for the host, reassuring everyone that .
"Tm not hervous, really." Then, turning to his manager, he said, "Don't run out afterwards."

Following the midnight news and Miss Kurz's introduction, Rubinstein hegan the Mozart sonata, and thus snother live radin concert got under-way as it has every night since Mon-day, April 14, 1975, when "Artists In Concert" first went on the air with a performance of the Second and Third Brandenburg Concertos by the Our Back chamber orchestra.

Since then there have been over 400 hour-long concerts given at the midnight hour. Programs have incloded

This Friday night, 1977 will be ushered in by the cast of "The Threepenny Opera" singing songs from the current New York Shakespeare Festival production.

and Walter Neiman, station manager of WQXR, et an Ardsley book fair two years ago. Decrying the abrupt conversion of WNCN-FM from a classical to a rock station under the dame WQIV, Zinman said, "Isn't it terrible that there is no live music." Neiman replied that WQXR had the hour from midnight to one o'clock available, so why not put on live music then? Zimman jumped at the idea, established the Haydn Foundation to buy the time for a year at the special cut-rate of $20,000, and asked the pianist Allen Weiss, "How would you like to do a radio show of live music?" Weiss, then 35 and concentrating on teaching, replied, "Sure." Nutbing like a regular live studio coocert series eschewing both the safety of tape and the ambience of the concert hall had been produced in years.

"It was a lost art," recalls Weiss, who was given only two months to put the program together. "The difficult thing

I had no idea of what to do or how to do it. I wanted to avoid the illusion of talent night from Great Neck. I wanted the program to be something sophisticated, something important, a program that artists would take seri-

Weiss, who reluctantly stopped hosting this past July because it was interfering with his other work, recalled Within e few weeks we were booked solid. By the end of the summer we were booked five months ahead." In fact, it wouldn't he hard to book the next two years immediately, but Bea Perillo, who handles the general administrative details, tries to keep the scheduling flexible so that the series isn't locked-in too far in advance. Even though they pay their own ex-penses and receive no fee, musicians hunger to get on the program and the chance to play for a small but select listening audience that extends as far as Toronto and the Maine woods. "A program like this takes us out of the closet," says pianist Gena Raps, "There are so many dedicated artists no one. knows about." As for the listeners, many have written in, praising the program for not only introducing them to previously unknown artists but also to music they otherwise would never have listened to.

Still, despite the program's growing reputation and a recent National Endowment of the Arts matching grant for $10,000, it is hardly financially secure, dependent on contributions to keep it going. Since last April WQXR has donated the air time. Otherwise, concedes Zinman, "Artists In Concert" would have died then and there. Both he and Neiman are hopeful that they will be able to attract corporations to underwrite much of the running costs which, exclusive of air time, can reach $75,000 a year. "It may die, it may not die," warns Zinman. "I would like to think circumstances would allow it to cootinue indefinitely. It can't go on this way forever."

A Thinking Man's Blue Collar Journal'.

n February 1973, John R. Coleman, a 51-yearold labor economist, president of Haverford College and chairman of the board of the Federal Reserve Bank of Philadelphia, took off on a two-month search to find out what it was like in the world where peopla worked with their hands instead of their mouths. He was variously a ditch-digger in Atlanta, Ga., a sandwich-and-salad-man in Boston, Mass., and a garbage collector in a Washington, D.C., suburb. He also kept a diary, which was published in 1974 as "Blue Collar Journal: A College President's Sabbatical." According to "Blue Collar Journal," a sincere if somewhat pious account, manual labor is good for the Tomorrow night on CBS at 9:30, Ralph Weite, Susan Anspach and Pat Hingle star in a GE Theater adaptation of "Blue Collar Journal" for television. It is called "The Secret Life of John Chapman" and it is a nice program in a heavy-handed way, 90 minutes of more or less real people, strong acting.

competent dialogue—in a "teleplay" by Albert Ruben—and quiet resolution. Or, rather, irresolution of a sort that is welcome and bracing on television. Like life, "The Secret Life of John Chapman" has some loose ends. Television, of course, improves on life. In life, John Coleman is divorced and the father of five. One of his tons. a freshman at Haverford at the time, took phone calls while he was off sabbaticalling. His own father was a metallurgical engineer. Whereas, on television, John Chapman is a widower and a father of two. It is his daughter who takes his telephone calls while he's gone. His son has dropped out of school to search for himself wherever authen tic selves are to be found these days. And Chapman's father is made to have been a stonecuiter instead of an engi-man doesn't see him. He sees a service in a uniform. It is underplayed, but painfully familiar to any of us who have been say; busboys in college diningballs where even our own class mates don't recognize us loside our exarched white jackets at chow time, we are the pumps at filling stations where they stop. If my eyes were dry when the Chanmans, father and son, finally got around to grokking one another, there is something nevertheless to be said for a television program that thinks out loud about the nature of work, that doesn't mainline on formulas of anger, that can portray embarrassment with-out looking for a laugh and suggest dignity without being so solemn that the feet fall asleep dreaming of cleats. An air of respect—for the characters and for those of us listening to and watching them attends. The Secret Life of John Chapman." To say that such an air is unusual on television is to wonder why this is so and to question whether all work has dignity.

"In Ballet Shoes the characters, their actions and feelings seemed very real. I loved it. I only wish that it was really true so I could find out what happened to them all." Kathy Amy, Age 13, Larchmont, N.Y.

Volpone Revisited

Ben Jonson would be tickled, no doubt, at the practically non-stop laughter issuing from the Broadhurst Theater these days, where "Siy Fox"—a farce by Larry Gelbart-based on Jonson's "Volpone"—has just started a run. George C. Scott, who apparently is having a wonderful time, has the role of Foxwell J. Sly, a sure clue to the "And you never remarried?" says one character to another, for example. "Never found anyone to fit her clothes, (See Theater)

The Magic of Marionettes

During this week following Christmas, the Salzburg Marionatte Theater is at Alice Tully Hall to regale young and old with programs including the fairy tales "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs" and "Rumpelstiltskin," performed in English, and the operas "The Magic Flute" and "Die Flederopers "The Magic Flute" and "Die Fledermaus," sung in German with English dialogue and narration. The Theater was founded in 1913 and, according to Harold C. Schonberg, who saw the company's last performance in New York, in 1969, "Obviously every minute of every year since then has been used for practice, rehearsal and training. By all means, go. This is one of the unusual entertainments in town."

At It Again

Actor Peter Sellers and director-producer Blake Edwards have collaborated on yet another film, the fourth in fact, of the loony Pink Panther series — "The Pink Panther Pink Panther series—"The Fink Panther Strikes Again," which has just opened. Vincent Canby reported, "There are no signs that anyone's spirits are flagging or that sinity is in any way imminent." The film is all around town, perfect for the holidays, and especially for kids on break from more studious matters. (See Film)

Musical Tomfoolery

Peter Schickele is back with his "P.D.Q. Bach" series for three performances this week at Carnegie Hall. Prof. Schickele is the author of "The Definitive Biography of P.D.Q. Bach," which takes as its starting point the birth of J. S. Bach's 21st child: point the birth of J. S. Rach's 21st child:

"There was obviously very little novelty in the situation, so Bach probably barely looked up when 'the midwife announced
'something has been born.' "At Carnegie, Prof. Schickele and the P.D.Q. Orchestra will introduce newly discovered works of Babe Bach: "The 'Howdy' Symphony in D
Major," "Eine Kleine Nichtmusik," "Missa
Hilarious" and more. (See Music)

On the Proper Education Of the Green Thumb

By IRENE MITCHELL

ecent surveys among professionals have pointed out what many homeowners already know; a large percentage of house plants bought at greenhouses, florists and garden centers do not survive their first year in the home. This stirs the old brown themb versus green thumb debate and too often the brown thumb side wins.

No one benefits when there is a high mortality among house plants. The buyer loses money and becomes discouraged. The seller may lose a potential good customer. Why do house plants fail and what can be done to reduce their mortality rate? My theory is that a green thumb is an educated

The beginning gardener especially needs to understand that two important plant growing factors-temperatures and humidity-cannot be isolated. They interact closely with each other. When temperature goes up indoors, relative humidity goes down. Even though a plant can endure the high temperature, it may be injured by the low humidity.

Often cool-climate plants suffer from what might be called a "secondary effect." When humidity is low, some pests such as splder mites proliferate rapidly. An infestation of mites adds insult lo injury to a plant already stressed by low humidity. The plant's demise is a result of mites which in turn were caused by low humidity.

Low humidity can be corrected to a great extent to brighten brown thumb theorists' hopes. One of the simplest methods is to provide a tray of moisture under the plants. As the moisture evaporates into the room climate, the plants are benefited.

Garden centers, dime stores, plant abops now have assorted plastic trays available in many sizes, depths and shapes. Or a good handy home carpen-ter can fashion one to fit a specific home need. The trays are filled as deeply as possible with pebbles (usually found at aquarium supply stores) or sand or kitty litter. Water is added to a level just below the top of the pebbles sand or litter. The plants are placed on top. As the moisture evaporates, it is replaced.

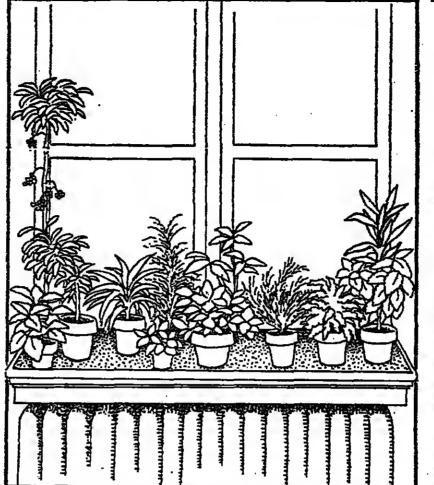

Great caulion should be observed when plants are watered. Excess water will drain into the pebble layer. If it is deep enough to reach the pots, the excess must be poured out or sipboned out with a turkey baster. The object is to prevent plants standing in water.

Windowsill gardens are important places for humidity trays, especially if there is a nearby radiator. A layer of insulation such as asbestos will protect plants from too much heat and drying

I do not want to be discouraging. But plant buyers should recognize their home environment limitations. Buyers can be realistic and accept the fact that many of our most beautiful potted plants are really not adapted to conditions found in the normal winter household where temperatures are between 65 and 75 degrees and relative humidity is less than 40 percent.

Azaleas, cyclamens and fuchsias are all cool climate plants that grow best temperatures that range from 45 to 60 degrees. Orchids and ferns can take warmer temperatures, but the low bumidity in the average hot-air-heated room will put great stress upon them. A steamy bright bathroom is ideal for orchids and ferns. Or a cold, sunny hallway or unused room is a perfect microclimate for azaleas. One of the most beautiful cyclamens I have ever seen flowered continuously in the bedroom of a lady who preferred to keep the room at 45 degrees.

Another group of temporary house plants includes those that are grown from seed, annuals. They are raised to perfection in a commercial greenhouse and sold when covered with flower

Among the most popular are calceo-larias (pocketbook plants) torenias, cinerarias, and exacums. These plants are to be enjoyed while they last, then discard them.

Impatiens and kalanchoes are also in the "showy but temporary" category even though they are perennials in their native habitat. Unlike many seedgrown plants, they will flower well if started anew from cuttings. Indoor gardeners should realize that it is not necessarily their fault if these plants become lanky and ugly in their old age. That is bow they grow in their native habitat, where new seedlings come along to take their place. Some cutting back does help to rejuvenate leggy plants and prolong their growing.

A plan; seller should be honest enough to tell his customer that many gift plants are not meant to he permanent. People spend money on other fleeting pleasures. A colorful plant that will give the owner several months of Continued on Page 40

ken sound-on-film Super 8 movie cameras were first introduced a few years ago, they delighted most amateurs with the quality of the results they produced, but serious filmmakers found that there were fairly strict limitations on what could, be done with their movies after they came back from processing. Anyone who wanted to embellish the original soundtrack with music, narration, or sound effects found himself facing troublesome problems. However, in the past year or two, new equipment has appeared with the ability to overcome most of these difficulties. New sound projectors and audio recorders permit after-the-fact sound to be added to existing soundtracks with comparative ease, and without putting the original film or sound track in jeopardy. More than one approach exists to make this possible. and it is now safe to say that professional-level audio results are within reach of all those who want them.

Before describing some of this interesting new equipment and the possibilities they present, let's give some thought to the limitations they overcome and how these limitations came about in the first place.

Sound-on-film cameras (or singlesystem cameras, as they are known technically) originally were conceived for the "typical" amateur, someone who likes to record people and events. In sight and sound, and who is content to leave his films in their original form. This kind of movie maker does constitute the numerical majority of amateurs, but it nonetheless leaves adrift

the many thousands of people w their films more seriously, a: want to enhance them by add or changing their original sounds

Suppose, for example, you deck would like to add a music to the original lip-sync sound the recorded while filming, Technical is possible through sound-original lip-sync sound-original status that is prethe majority of Super 8 sound tors. Simply thread the film projector, plug in the music sour just the projector for sound-or operation, and start everything Assuming everything works pe you wind up with a pleasant mix that has the music fading tween dialog passages, then re-into the background behind this mentaries of the people appear.

But the assumption that ever will work perfectly is not also safe one. What if you miss one music cues and fade too soon late? If the music is from a photerecord, what if the needle stig skips a groove? What if a mon finctuation in line voltage caus projector or music source to way distort? What if a misthreaded a damaged portion of film caus-film to start skipping in the project

There are all kinds of "what-if can befall a recording session solution would seem to be enough: merely erase the mistatry again. The only problem the crase head in the projector distinguish between the music and the original lip-sync track cannot erase one without also the other. You could easily punsic over again of course, b. this process you must get eve exactly right the first time. Other of the situation. A common failing is to persist in a plan beyond the point where the opponent has poured icewater on it. Then there is nothing to do but drop it, facing up to the cold reality that charging ahead means courting disaster.

Naturally, it hurts to discover that your strategy, no matter how ingenious, is floored, but it has got to hurt more to cling to it and get roasted. In the Budapest International Tournament, the gifted young Hungarian grandmaster Gyula Sax, with visions of brilliancy prizes dancing in his head, could not bring himself to acknowledge the blunt power of Edmar Mednis's defense. He overpressed until the international master from Queens served him up for Christmas turkey.

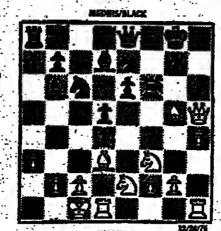

Accepting the gambit 6 QxNP, R-NI; 7 Q-R6 allows Black an ample range of good defenses, for example: 7. PxP; 8 P-QR3, BxNch; 9 PxB, Q-B2. Instead, Sax followed Spassky-Uhlmann, Manila Interzonal, 1976, with the new 6 N-B3.

An Improved Defensive Line Whereas Uhimann had gotten into trouble with 6. . PxP?; 7 NrP, Q-B2; 8 B-N5ch!, QN-B3; 9 O-O, BxN; 10 PxB; B-Q2; 11 BxN!, PxB; 12 B-R31, Mednis improved the defense with the straightforward 6. . . QN-B3. Mednis's 8...P-B4; 9 PxPe.p., RxP, enabling the KR to take part in the defense, put a damper on the idea of 9 BxPch. Later, his pawn offer 11. 4 --B-R4 could be accepted only at the price of allowing the black center to roll after 12 PxP, P-K4. Saz did not mind yielding a pawn by 12. . . PxP; 13 N-K2, since he intended a ferocious mating attack with 14 P-KR4 and 15 B-KN5. However, Mednis could not be lured into a fatal opening of the KR file by 15 . . . PxB?; 16 PxP, and he stopped Sax in his tracks with 15. . . Q-K1!.

Then the only logical continuation was 16 QxQ, RxQ: 17 BxR, PxB with an operous game for White, since Mednis would have a pawn for the exchange and a dominating cluster of center pawns, Nevertheless, Sax would then have had drawing chences, whereas after his stubborn 16 Q-N4?, P-K4; 17 Q-N3, R-K3, White, a pawn down without any strack, was dead

Position After 15 ... Q-K1

. With 18 P-B4, Sax managed to delay . . P-K5, but only for one move. Rather then mess with 20. . . PxN; 21 B-QB4, Mednis, already abort of time, preferred the simpler 20. . . N-B4; 21 Q-B4, RxN; 22 BxR, PxB, obtaining two inor pieces for a rook.

Although Mednis could very likely have captured 25. . . PxB; 26 PxP, he did not want to give himself possible problems on the open KR file. In any case, after the queens came off at move 29, the ending was easy, although Sax resigned only after losing the exchange

My customers go out of their way to get here, ecause I go out of my way for my customers"-

Ninth Avenue and 45th Street isn't. ly the heart of mid-town Manhattan. h means, if I depended on window pers for business, I'd starve. So, what I do is make sure I give people an good reason to come to my store. it, I give them two reasons. Prices an't be beat and service that no Ise even comes close to. [ also give them the best equipment ey can buy. It all depends on what need. For instance, I've got the whole n system. Everything from the brand Nikon F2SB (this camera can practically ograph a zit on a fly), to the Nikon F2 which has got to be the favorite of the top essional photographers hanging around my store. And for the amateur who y means business when it comes to taking pictures, I've got the incredible format. All in all, I've got them all - including the great Nikkor lenses. And when it comes to service - everyone comes to Hirsch Photo. That's because nd time with my customers. I don't give them the bum's rush. I'll spend an hour with them whether they're interested in a $700 camera or a $20 Instamatic. I don't pressure people either. If you don't buy from us, fine. I know you'll be back because nobody else will treat you as good as we do. I guess what it all comes down to is, at Hirsch Photo we don't hand people a line. That's why there's a line waiting to between bridge and mathematics, since both require owers of visualization and logical analysis but in practice the two seldom go together: Few top-ranked mathematicians are competent bridge players, and few bridge experts know anything about mathematics. The latter part of the proposition was demonstrated a month ago at the Fall Nationals in Pittsburgh. Several experts misplayed a relatively common suit combination on the diagramed deal from the Blue Ribbon Pairs and then argued flercely. that they were right. They had played six diamonds from here is an obvious affinity

the North position, and the fate of the contract depended on the handling of the trump suit. They had begun with the diamond ace, hoping for a two-two division or for a singleton honor, and bad failed.

This play loses whenever East began with a small singleton or a void. An alternative play is to finesse once and play the ace on the next round. This is slightly better since it loses only to a singleton honor in the East hand. Best of all is to take two finesses, losing only when East has king-queen doubleton. (Obviously this discounts the hopeless situations, when East has both honors guarded.)

One expert offered a fallacious argument. "I disregard the unlikely 4-0 break," he said, "and when I lead the ten, the seven falls. Now in playing the ace, I lose only to king-que en," he explained, "instead of to kingen doubleton with East, which is hightly more likely." The fallacy in this lies in the fact that West would have a choice of plays with seven-four, but no choice with king-queen-seven.

This was a straightforward theoretical problem. At another table Lou Reich of Waltham, Mass., had a much more complex practical problem, for he landed in the shaky contract of six spades after the auction shown. His decision to play in spades rather than diamonds was an example of match-point greed for a few extra points, and he regretted his choice when the dummy appeared.

West led the cinb eight, and the queen won in the closed hand. The routine line of play was to hope for a miracle in trumps with East bolding three including the queen. This would have been an 18 percent chance, and he would still have had to bring bome the diamonds. In this case there would have been no temptation to play the ace quickly, since that would remove the only entry to the dummy.

All this seemed too long a shot, so

Reich set about making as many tricks as he could without touching trumps. At the second trick he led the heart queen, and discarded a diamond from dummy when West did not cover. A low heart was ruffed, and the spade king was cashed. A low club was ruffed to enter the closed hand, and the spade ace collected West's queen.

The beart ace was cashed, and a diamond was led to the ace in dummy. After cashing two club winners, on which East had to follow, the declarer reached this position after discarding his remaining diamond and a beart:

When a diamond was led from dummy East could not prevent the declarer from scoring both his trumps to make the slam. If East ruffed, South could simply discard the heart jack. Notice that the effect would have been the same if South bad cashed his spade jack earlier: The spade six would still have scored the 12th trick eventually, the Elmo ST - 1200D, comes preequipped with the circuitry required to send the pulse. Most other sound projectors can be modified, however. The process is simple enough, and anyone who knows how to wield a soldering iron can accomplish it themselves by means of conversion kits that cost about $25. Or, for about double that price, the job can be done by any namber of camera repair firms,

This keeps picture and track in step on a frame-for-frame basis, and the sound of peoples' voices will match the movement of their mouths. At the moment only one projector.

As for recorders equipped for synchronizing with the projector, at least three are on the market. Two are produced by Super 8 Sound in Cambridge, one being a modified Sony priced at $795, the other a modified Uner priced at $1,175. An alternative built from the ground up for motion picture work, and thus easier to use, is the Optasound 116R cassetté recorder, priced et $425. Recorders capable of synchronizing with projectors provide a number of additional benefits of value to the advanced amateur and the professional, but even for the neophyte they offer

Movie makers who prefer not to invest in such equipment, but who would like a synchronized copy of their soundtracks for safe keeping, can have a duplicate made for them by firms that have the necessary equipment. Optasound quotes a price of $8.50 for a synchronized cassette tape dubbed from a 50-foot film, and this would seem a reasonable cost for insurance against damage to the original soundtrack.

By one means or another, the original limitations of sound-on-film movies are falling by the wayside. The reasons are not difficult to comprehend—for one thing Super 8 increasingly is becoming a professional production tool, and pros must have full resources available to them. In addition, movie making on a serious level increasingly is becoming a pursuit of amateurs, students, and non-professional filmers who need to use motion pictures in connection with their work. Super 8 cameras long ago evolved to a high level of sophistication, flexibility, and versatility, and the same range of options and alternatives now are available in soundtrack work.

when the thoughts of many turn to the less fortunate-young and old, deprived and destitute, ailing and handicappedand the seasonal spirit of helping others in need is reflected in the stamps that come out at this time of

These are the semi-postals—stamps with a denomination and an added charge, with the surcharge going to some philanthropic activity. For more than six decades, philately has been helping a variety of causes in this man-

The world's oldest charity series is Switzerland's, which has been issuing "Pro Juventute"-For the Youthsemi-postals for 63 years, counting this year. It has put out for 1976 a characteristically attractive set of four that concludes a four-year series devoted to native plants of the Swiss woodlands. A 20 plus 10 centimes atamp showing a sprig of harherries, an 80 plus 40c showing lungwort blooms, and two 40 plus 20c stamps depicting black elderberries and russet lime blossoms complete the forest series begun in 1973. All are printed in multicolor photogravure. The post office sale of the semi-postals is only for several months and then any surplus stocks of the issue are destroyed.

A form of the Pro Javentutes began in 1912 when the Swiss borrowed from Denmark the idea of permitting post office windows to sell privately printed anti-tuberculosis "Christmas seals." Instead, however, the Swiss soon decided that selling semi-postals through clerks would be more efficient and cheaper, so that more of the contributed money would go to benefit youngsters. More-over, because the postal administration has strict accounting practices, the public knows exactly how much money is collected.

The 1912 Pro Juventutes were merely charity "stickers" or labels stressing in the three languages of the country the benefits of sunshine on the health of children, and on the back that they were being sold for anti-tuberculosis work among children. Although the labels had no postal validity, they can be found postmarked since their use on the face of envelopes also properly stamped for postage was permitted by the Swiss post office.

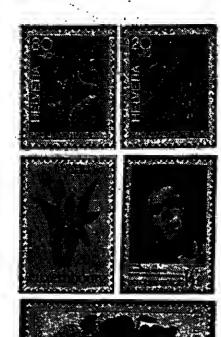

The first real Pro Juventute stemp was issued in 1913. This bore the symbolic figure of Helvetia with the Matterhorn discernible, towering in the background. It was sold at 10c but was valid only for 5c postage and was inscribed 5c. No semi-postal was issued in 1914. But from 1915 on, an annual series has appeared and has grown in popularity, not only because of the worthy cause but also because of the interesting subjects and fine designs. There have heen issues with the coats of arms and emblems of the cantons of Switzerland and its cities, the costumes of different cantons, flowers, insects, animals, birds, fruits, and the most recent—shrubs, herbs and fruit of the forest appreciated for their me-dicinal properties. In effect, the stamps are the story of Switzerland. Proceeds from the surcharge, originally for "poor and destitute children," now go to a centralized youth welfare organization and other charitable institutions.

Protected plants of Luxembourg have been used on a Caritas set of five that continues last year's theme, Gentians, represented by a fringed gentian with four blue petals, are on a 2 franc plus 25 centimes stamp. The yellow narcis-sis or wild daffodil is on a 5f plus 25c. The red helleborine, an orchid akin to those of the tropics, is on a 6f plus 50c. Another, the late spider orchid, is on a 12f plus If. A member of the Illy family, the two-leaved squill, is on a 20f plus 8f. The surcharge raises funds for various charitable institu-

West Germany also has taken a horticultural motif for its 1976 welfare issue, with stamps of garden flowers stranged in bunches. All multicolored —as are virtually all Yuletide semi-postals—a 30 plus 15 pfennig has phlox, a 40 plus 20pf has marigolds, dahlias are on a 50 plus 25pf and pansies on a 70 plus 35pf. The surcharge is for the benefit of the Federal Working Association of Free Welfare Work West Berlin has a similar quartet using single blooms: iris on a 30 plus 15pf, wallflower on a 40 plus 20pf, dable on a 50 plus 25pf and larkspur on a 70 plus 35pf.

Aid to the mentally handicapped is served by a Belgian semi-postal of 14f plus 6f showing the head of a de-ranged boy, a detail from a painting by Velaquez in the Prado Museum in Madrid. The surcharge helps the national association for aid to mentally ill. Earlier Belgium issued a set of ex semi-postals, with surtax for cultural purposes, to announce Rubens Year 1977. The set showed religious paintings by the great artist.

From the Netherlands comes the 50th series of its child welfare stamps, a set of four semi-postals reproducing children's drawings. The Dutch postal administration selected as sultable stamp designs four drawings from 65,000 entries in an unrelated drawing contest for children up to 15 years. There are two by young boys, two soccer players on a 40 plus 20c, and a puffing boat on a 45 plus 20c. An elephent and a carayan truck, by young girls, are on a 55 plus 20c and a 75 plus 25c. The Netherlands has also issued a 55 plus 25c stamp to mark the 50th anniversary of the fight against rheumatism, to benefit its Anti-Rheumatism Association. The vertical shows a rheumatic patient encircled by helping hands.

The Netherlands Antilles in the Caribbean, which began semi-postals in 1948 to help crippled children and has since extended the benefits of the surcharge to all aspects of youth care, under a foundation serving the aix islands, has put out three semi-postals hy a native artist on the theme of "the child being carried."

Surinam is also providing for child welfare with a set of five semi-postals ahowing the head of children, each with a dog of a different breed.

Finland has gone back to its past with three semi-postals for the benefit of its Anti-Tuberculosis Association that depict traditional wedding ceremonies, what the Finns call "Crowning the Bride," One stamp shows a wedding procession led by musicians followed by the bride and groom and their par-ents and guests farther behind. Another shows the wedding dance, under a cloth on the ceiling called the "bridal sky." The third shows the wedding feast, with the newly married couple, the "kaaso" or dresser of the bride and

Gifts of Stamps

Collectors wishing to make gifts of stamps will find no worthier place to send their duplicates and other material than to the organizations of George Silberberg, whose activities have made him known as the "St. Nicholas of Philately."

Through these organizations, Philatelic Hobbies and its offshoot Hobbies for All Ages, both at 2122 Wallace Avenue, Bronx, N.Y. 10462, he has given to more than 4,000 non-profit organizations here and abroad mountains of used stamps and millions of dollars worth of new stamps and albums contributed by stamp dealers.

In addition to serving hospitals, facilities for veterans, youth organiza-tions, penal institutions, welfare centers and countless other charitable organizations in the United States, George Silberberg and his wife Bobby annually make a three-month trip to other parts of the world, distributing stamps, albums and other supplies to children in schools and hospitals and other institutions.

This indefatigable henefactor, who incidentally is the subject of the lead piece in this month's Scott's Stamp Journal, started his Samaritan career more than 30 years ago when an accident put him in the hospital with both legs crushed end not likely ever to walk again. As he struggled in the darkness of his sickroom toward the recovery he eventually made, he made a bargain with life and yowed he would devote the rest of his existence to brightening the lives of others afflicted or in need of friendship and encouragement. He has given up his career as a successful consulting engineering to devote full time to his

Philately, George Silberberg's hobby, makes up a large part of the contributions, but there are also leather craft supplies, art materials, hobby kits, yarn, clay, burlap and other cloth material, paint brushes and canvas, raffia, books, records, television sets, record players, sewing machines and hundreds of other items that serve for recreation or re-

The Bicentennial Sets Can Still Be Ordered

ext Friday is NOT the deadline for ordering the special 40 percent silver 1776-1976 Bicentennial proof and uncirculated three-coin sets. Friday is only the deadline for ordering the uncirculated sets in the colorful holiday packaging devised by the Mint as a spur to hulk sales. The Mint's annonncement of the start of Christmas gift packaging, with a Dec. 31 cutoff, appeared in this column in mid-November, Inquiries from a number of readers raised the possibility that the statement might have been misinterpreted to mean a Dec. 31 cutoff for all orders. Part of this confusion may have resulted from a news release issued by the Mint, which began with this sentence: "The closing of the Bicentennial year also brings to a close the government's various numismatic tributes to our nation's 200 years of freedom."

The Mint was simply emphasizing that it planned no new issues of Bicentennial coins or medals. The three-coin proof and uncirculated sets have already been produced and stockpiled in quantity. No ordering cutoff is at present being contemplated. The Dec. 31 deadine affects only the holiday packaging.

The three coins in the sets are the Washington quarters, the Kennedy half dollar and the Eisenhower dollar, with the dual date of 1776-1976 on the obverse and special comemmorative designs on the reverse—a drummer boy on the quarter, Independence Hall on the half dollar and a Liberty Bell and moon design on the dollar. These deaigns created a unique two-year "type" for the three coins. They will revert to their traditional eagle reverse designs next year.

The three-coin 40 per cent silver bicentenniai proof set is priced at $12; the uncirculated set costs $9 (or $7.

per set if purchased in hulk lots of 50 sets or multiples of 50: there is no hulk-order discount price for the proof.

Orders for single sets (or small quantitles) should be sent to the regular address: Numismatic Service, Bureau of the Mint, 55 Mint Street, San Francisco 94175. Orders for 50-set multiples should go to the Bulk Rate Bicentennial Coin Program, P.O. 5500, San Francisco 94101. Checks or money orders should be made payable to the Bureau of the Mint Both types of sets will also continue to be available over the counter at the Mint's sales desk in the Treasury Department building in Washington, and at the three Mint facilities in Philedelphia, Denver and San Francisco.

Tuesday

The Israel Numismatic Society of New Jersey will hold a "holiday meeting" on Tuesday in Temple B'Nai Jeshurun, 1025 South Orange Avenue. in Short Hills, N.J. The meeting, open to all interested collectors, will start at 7:30 P.M.

On Old St. Simons

To the Numismatics Editor.

Your Nov. 21 discussion (and illustration) of the 19th-century Wright & Gowen "good for five cents in merchandise" token of St. Simons Mills on St. Simons Island, Ga., brought up a flood of memories for me. The Wright of the firm of Wright & Gowen was my great-uncle, James Bruce Wright, and the Gowen was my grandfather,

St. Simons Mills was a post office on St. Simons Island, located in what is now known as the Methodist Center. Wright & Gowen began as a mill commissary and was purchased by my great-uncle and my grandfather be-tween 1875 and 1880. Wright & Gowen did not own the saw mill, located at St. Simons Mills; it was owned by the Dodge family of New York. One of the members of the family, Anson G. P. Dodge, was Rector of Christ Church on St. Simons Island, located on the site where John Wesley preached during the time that General James Oglethorpe was Governor of the Colony of Georgia, Incidentally, President-elect Jimmy Carter attended Christ Church while he was vacationing on

St. Simons Island. I do not believe that the tokens were a "company store" device; I think they were used to make change because the nearest bank was on the mainland in Brunswick, which could only be reached by boat—a rather long and arduous trip in those days.

What started as a company commissary became in time one of the largest ship chandlery operations on the Georgia coast. Sailing vessels from all over the world came to load lumber. Wright & Gowen supplied these vessels from St. Marys, Ga., on the Florida line, up through Darien and Sapelo at the northern part of the Altamaha River delta. Sailing vessels which had never visited this area before would arrive and the captain would arrange with Wright & Gowen to cover the ship's disbursements and necessary supplie The disbursements frequently included the payment of wages to the ship's crew. When the captain was ready to sail, he would give a draft on the ship's owners, frequently drawn on European banks. Over a period of many years Wright & Gowen never lost a penny on these drafts.

The saw mill closed about 1907 or 1908 and the partnership of Wright & Gowen was incorporated and became Wright & Gowen Company, which built and operated a hardware, grocery and ship chandlery store at the corner of Mansfield and Bay Streets in Brunswick, Ga. This husiness continued until the 1940's when it was liquidated after the death of my great uncle. My grandfather had died many years before. I trust you will enjoy reading these

To remove excess paint from a brush, start by wining it vigorously across the rim of the can several times so that excess paint runs back into the can. Next, rub the brush out on scrap material such as old lumber, scrap pieces of plasterboard or plywood, or even on sheets of cardboard. Don't just rub the tips of the brush; hold it almost flat assenst the surface and rub the full length of the bristles against the

If the brush was used with a latex (water-thinned)-paint, then wash under running water if possible. While letting water run over the bristles, rub back and forth against the bottom of the sink or pail, and be sure the bristles are spread apart so that the water gets in near the heel to flush out paint that is caked there.

Where running water is not available, use a pail of water, but work the bristles vigorously under the water with your fingers. Pour the dirty water out, then replace with fresh water and repeat. Three or four ringes may be required before the water runs clear after the brush is washed in it.

Add about the same amount of fresh solvent to the can again and repeat the process twice more, for a total of. three rinses. Since only a small amount of solvent is used each time, all three rinses will require only a few ounces of liquid. If desired, the dirty solvent can be poured into a separate container and allowed to settle, then only the dirty portion at the bottom thrown away after the top is poured off and

When a brush will be used again the next day, this cleaning will be sufficient. However, if the brush will be stored for some time, then one more step is advisable. Rinse the brush in a warm solution of detergent and water, or use one of the water-washable brush cleaning solutions sold in most paint stores. This final rinse should be followed by a clear water rinse, then the brush is dried and wrapped before storing. To dry the brush hold the handle between the palms of your hands with the bristles pointing down inside a can or bucket. Now spin back and forth between the. palms of the hands by twirling the handle rapidly. This will spin all water or solvent out of the bristles, but the spattering will be contained inside the

Brushes that are heavily caked with paint, or those whose bristles get tangled and knotted when spinning or twirling them, will benefit from being combed out with a steel-tooth comb which is sold for this purpose in most paint and hardware stores. Lay the brush almost flat on a piece of old wood or a stack of paper, then comb the bristles out as shown in the accompanying photo.

A good paint brush should always be wrapped in paper or thin cardboard when it is to be stored for any length of time. This not only keeps dirt and dust out of the bristles, it also belps retain the shape of the brush so bristles don't curl or flare. Should I use a heat lamp or rotary sanding machine, or is there another method you would advise? - R.B.

A. I think the simplest method is to use a semi-paste chemical paint remover. Some true epoxies will not soften with paint remover, but since you used an "epoxy spray" which came in a spray can, this is not a true, two-part epoxy finish. It should come off easily with paint remover. One of the water-wash, semi-paste types will be easiest to use on vertical surfaces, and will permit rinsing clean with water.

put on this pipe to make it act like

A: Putting metal fins on this pipe

would convert it to a type of convector

radiator that radiates beat to the basement but there are two things you must consider. First, since the pipes are up near the ceiling, and heat rises, this would be a very inefficient means of heating. Second, by radiating some of the heat out of this main supply pipe

you may be lowering the efficiency of the system and may be robbing heat from the radiators above. A far better solution would be to add a few separate radiators near the basement floor off (upward) to the outside wall.

Roller covers should always be removed from their handles for washing. Leaving them in place on the handle means that some paint could get insidethe sleeve or barrel, and when this hardens it will almost weld the two parts together so that they will never come apart.

As with brushes, rollers used in latex paint should preferably be washed in running water-otherwise use several pails of water, but ectively work the water into the pile with the fingers in order to get it really clean. Keep rinsing till the water runs clear, then wipe dry with a cloth or with paper

In the case of rollers used in a solvent-thinned paint, use the tray as a cleaning pail. Pour an inch or two of solvent in the tray. Work the cover around in this, then roll it over layers of old cardboard or newspaper, Pour the dirty solvent out of the tray, then repeat with fresh solvent. This time draw the edge of a wood paint paddle or plastic ice scraper across the face of the fabric to scrape out paint embedded near the center of the pile. Then roll out on newspaper or cardboard and rinse a third time. A final rinse in warm detergent solution and clear water should leave the fabric cover clean.

When storiog roller covers, wrap them loosely in paper or plastic, but try to stand them up-or put them back on their handle when dry and then hang by the bandle. The idea is to avoid laying the roller cover flat until it is dry, otherwise it may develop a flat spot.

Remove cover from handle when

Eighth, ninth and tenth on this listthough not necessarily in order of importance—were events that rated three superlatives: saddest, most moving, most heartening. The saddest were the deaths of four of the oldest and most venerable masters of modern photography: Imogen Cunningham. Minor White, Paul Strand and Man Ray,

The most moving was the ceremony in the office of the French Consul General in New York at which nearly 80-year-old André Kértèsz achieved the rare distinction of being awarded the Ordre des Arts et des Lettres, the highest bonor given to artists by the French government, If Kértèsz did not weep some of the witnesses did.

lying untapped throughout the land, and the many theaters now existing but lacking in the resources to mine this talent, the proper government subsidy, democratically apportioned to recipients of a high artistic calibre, will help to create the climate for the growth of theater in the United States. And before long, I suspect we will see the emergence of many fine theatrical companies of high quality, any number of which could readily serve this nation at home and proudly represent it

JOSEPH PAPP abroad. New York Shakespeare Festival

Clive Barnes replies: Not for the first time, and almost certainly not for the last, Mr. Papp and I must agree to differ. In fact almost the only times we ever do agree is when he is deluged with my praise; an inundation most happily frequent.

On our diverse views on what would, or would not, constitute an American national theater, naturally many views will differ. Mr. Papp's present operation is admirable, but it does not, in my view, constitute a national theater. He implies that my concepts are based on my British experience. This is possibly so: I was born and educated in Britain and bave lived in the United States for only 12 years. However, is such a view necessarily mistaken?

There are many differences, even cultural differences, between the United States and the United Kingdom; there are also many similarities. Both countries have national operas, national ballets, national orchestras and there is no marked structural or even esthetic difference between the two. Why should there be any grest difference between two national theaters? One thing particularly puzzies me about Mr. Papp's contentions. He asks: "What national theater in the entire world today bas made more exciting contributions to the art of the theater than any one of the high-quality nongovernmental theaters in England and the U.S.?" I do not see what be means by "non - governmental theaters." Presumably he means London's West End and America's Broadway. Both are important theatrical institutions. but bardly as important creatively as Mr. Papp's own theater, Britam's National Theater or its Royal Shakespeare Company, or a number of other subsidized theaters in both countries. A government subsidy, whether Federal, state, municipal, or coming from foundations or business (even the letter two are, through the tax structure, partly governmental), does not itself make a tainly not "non-governmental." I believe that anyone who cares to look down the theater directories of either New York or London will find a great deal of quality in the so-called national theater. Such theaters are cer-

A National Theater Debated

"commercial" theaters of both cities. But scrutiny will surely show that most of that originated in the non-profitmaking, "governmental" theater.

I am fully aware that there is a difference between starting a national theater and starting a car, indeed I bave noticed such a difference A national theater must grow, and will start small. But should it not have, even from its acorn beginnings, some kind of consistent policy to it? It did, as Mr. Pepp justly points out, take decades to create Britain's two major theaters. Yet during all of that period they were more or less headed in one direc-

With Mr. Papp one never knows where his policy is going to lead us next. When he took over Lincoln Center we had nothing but modern plays in the Vivian Beaumoot, and nothing but small-scale Shakespeare in the Mitzi E. Newbouse. Then this policy was scrapped. The new plays moved to Broadway-that particular season was scrapped after one play. At year's end, Mr. Papp bas not given us one new production this current season.

This is not to argue with Mr. Papp. My admiration for him is unbounded, and I admire particularly the adroit sidesteps he takes to avoid the slings and arrows of outrageous fortune. Yet perhaps another form of mammoth theater could be permitted to at least co-exist with Mr. Papp, which would perhaps bave a stronger leaning toward the classic theater than even Mr. Papp, himself an advocate of the classic theater, would or could consider desirable.

My physical concept of such a national theater-150 actors, etc.-was not foreseen as bappening tomorrow, or even the day after, but merely as some kind of aspiration. And if my wish to see government at all levels seek e closer parity between education and cultural needs seems to Mr. Papp to be "insensitive," I must say that his use of statistics to prove his point seems simplistic, even spurious.

Mr. Papp, who appears to suspect that everything that is not a bouquet is a bomb, is doing a great job, and should be permitted to do it for all our stimulation and enjoyment. Personally I think a more classically oriented repertory that would also give us modern plays that are not solely American would be to the taste of many Americans. And not merely first-generation British immigrants either. Real Americans, just like Mr. Papp.

To the Editor:

Clive Barnes' "Critic's Notebook: Comments, Not Complaints, About Broadway, Mr. Papp, etc." opens with his customary disclaimers: no one stands second as Joseph Papp's admirer; Joseph Papp is "the best thing to heppen to the American theater, Ever!" Then Mr. Barnes goes on to attack Mr. Papp as an opportunist, an "entrepreneur of other men's dreams," someone who refuses to accept the responsibility to create a national theater, one who operates his theaters at Lincoln Center "commercially," who has failed to come up with anything revolutionary," a "fund-raiser" who trims his policy to the winds, and chides the New York Shakespeare Festival as a 'public theater, publicly accountable." (whose record) is not good enough. I am writing in controlled rage at this damaging attack on a friend, colleague and most esteemed co-worker. If I were a critic of the theater from another country visiting New York for the first time to see its theater and report on it to my readers, I would (I suppose) note that someone called Joseph Papp and something called the New York Shakespeare Festival are currently represented by four plays. I would check the credentials of the four plays: Best Musical, Best Play, Pulitzer Prize; I would read Mr. Barnes' advertised quotes and I'm sure I would see all the plays. I think I would be struck by their range and diversity, by the fact that two of the four are on Broadway, playing to turnaway eudiencesone, "A Chorus Line," the most acclaimed musical of a decade or more, and one a play ("For Colored Girls. . ") that nothing I had heard in recent years about Broadway would have led me to expect to find playing to a standing ovation there. Then, the two others at Lincoln Center, that bastion of establishment culture, where Brecht's barsh indictments in "Threepenny Opera" ring out nightly in the travertine embankments: "What's robbing a bank compared to founding a bank? What's killing a man compared to hiring a man?" and in "Streamers," we find a brilliantly wrought play of profound dramatic import, acted and directed with acuity rare in any theater in the world.

Realizing that these four plays were the work of e non-profit, institutional, subsidized theater and not of commercial Broadway producers, I would seek to find out more about this theater and its director, Joseph Papp. Then I would unfold the whole story: of this idea of a theater advocated by an individual, a man with an exotic and futurist vision, of a theater fur use rather than for profit, of a theater where the price of admission was not the condition of entry ("entrepreneur of other men's dreams"-for shamel), of the public respons bility for subvention of the performing arts, a battle cry raised years before the National Endowment for the Arts, the New York State Council on the Arts, and the New York City Department of Cultural Affairs were invented, I would stand in awe and wonder at free Shakespeare in Central Park, of a Mobile Theater that toured the tortured outer boroughs of New York bringing theater to outreaches that would hardly promise bospitality. I would visit the Public Theater and marvel at the modesty of this private conversion of a threatened landmark building into an amazing rabbit warren of different theater spaces, and note with pleasure the rush of ection in so many of these spaces. How pompous and ponderous, by contrast, the building of national "institutional" structures by well-intentioned governments for an act as inherently anarchistic and anti-government as the theater is et its best. I would be amazed that this radical, peripatetic and indefatigable theater might indeed be invited to join the cultural colossi of Lincoln Center, and would be surprised that it accepted the invitation.

The achievements of the New York Shakespeare Festival in twenty years are proud and have provided rich rewards to all of us who have participated and contributed to them. We are proud of our productions, proud of our writers, composers, directors, actors, designers: our artists, artisans, and technicians. We are proud of our box office staff that Brooks Atkinson once troubled to write about commending their concern and gentleness. We are proud of the national emulation that has led to free Shakespeare theaters in Los Angeles, Washington, Chicago and Dailas. We are proud of theaters around the country that have taken courage and beart from the existence of the Public Theater. We know what the clearly demonstrated and sustained practices of the Festival have meant to aspirant serious playwrights, those that are produced here and those that bope to be produced bere. We know what its existence means to thousands of actors for whom it confirms the validity of their aspirations and the seriousness of the theater as an art. We know the significance of the Festival to black and Puerto Rican theater workers in New York in its receptivity and openness. We know what the Festival means to hundreds of thousands of New Yorkers who attend all ten theaters operated by the Festival, the Delacorte and the countless others who just appreciato the knowledge that it's there. Don't mistake me: it's not that I believe every play, every theatrical manifestation of the Festival to be a flawless masterpiece. It's the sum of the Festival's work that has generated its character, and the American theater will never be the same. Mr. Barnes's plaintive plea Why should we not bave a theater we can call our own?" is pathetic: we bave one. He is simply too myopic to.

BERNARD GERSTEN Associate Producer New York Shakespeare Festival

Clive Barnes replies:

Two and three-quarter cheers for Joseph Papp, Bernard Gersten and the New York Shakespeare Festival, I am in almost total agreement with Mr. Gersten's succinct account of their achievements-it is a story always good to bear. However, I was not ettacking Mr. Papp as such. His theater is splendid, and I bave my notices to confirm my opinion. My point was that many people, including myself, regard a national theater as a theater combining e classic repertory with the best of the modern theater. It seemed to me that Mr. Papp's predecessor at Lincoln Center, Jules Irving, while not so talented a producer, was moving toward that aim with more determination. Just that, nothing more.

Incidentally I was not going to mention it, but since Mr. Gersten brings it up, bow about those four current. productions the Shakespeare Festival is so proud of. 'Colored Girls" began life in an East Side bar, before it was picked up by Woodie King's New Federal Theater at the Henry Street Settlement; "Streamers" started at Arvin Brown's theater in New Haven; "A Chorus Line" is entirely the conception of Michael Bennett; "Tha Threepenny Opera"-to which the Shakespeare Festival did contribute a great deal-is a masterly revival. But who is counting?

Plant Boom

People like to have plants around them. If anyone has doubts, the wholesale figures for the tropical plant industry are most convincing. According to sales figures in News and Views, published by the American Horticultural Society, the plant boom has exploded. Six or more years ago the market re-ported sales between $4 million and $24 million, By 1972, sales had doubled to $48 million and last year totaled $187 million. The industry is projecting sales of $260 million by the end of he a popular state Bellem the hillestry. John C. Vaughan, president of the Vaughan-Jacklin Corp., attributed this rise in broad consumer buying of foliage plants as an indication "of the much heightened increase in interest in all of horticulture and gardening." He continued, "I also feel this increase flows from the basic need for associative values and relationships that evenmally become instilled in people living in mature societies. Of late, we have all become more sensitive to the quality of our lives."

RRIGHT LIGHT/LOW LIGHT

I am confused I read directions for house plants to be grown in bright light or low light levels, but do not know what this means, Help? P.N., Man-

According to Cornell University's recommendations of Artificial Lighting for Decorative Plants (Bulletin 1087) Bright light locations are just beyond the reaches of the sun's rays. Low light locations are eight or more feet from windows with only general illumination Good plants for bright light include begonias, episcias, ficus, peperomia, schefflera, German ivy and piggyback. Good plants for low light levels include Chinese evergreen, aucuba, kangaroo vine, dieffenbachia, dracaena, screw pine, ferns and sansevieria.

BROMELIAD TROUBLE My bromeliad has flowered but the outer leaves are drooping and wilting. I am unable to see any side sprouts which are supposed to form now. A.F.,

Brooklyn, N.Y. Lack of proper light could be the problem. Most bromeliads are epiphytic plants gaining their sustenance in their natural climate from the air, Indoors, they need good light, not direct sun, a well-draining soil, the kind used for orchids is popular. The well in the vaselike leaves must be kept filled with water and the roots are fed lightly during the growing period. After the flower fades, the stalk should be cut off and new offshoots will form at the base of the old plant. The shoots are repotted for continued bloom; the old plant will not flower again.

TIP ON PLANT FEEDING

We have so many house plants. mainly gesneriads growing under lights, I had to work out e simple solution for feeding them. Instead of constantly mixing new batches of water-soluble fertilizer, I keep two plastic two-gallon jugs filled with water and one-half teaspoon of fertilizer. This is one-fourth the regular rate for the brand of fertilizer I use, Each time I water, I pour from the large jug into a smaller quart watering can with a long spout. The water is always at room temperature and the plants seem to thrive. Mrs. J. L., Rye, N.Y.

Extraordinary Azaleas

By EVE HAMMOND

igh up on heavy-duty glass shelves in our spartment windows, the potted azaleas are getting ready for a winter of bloom. They are stuck as full of buds as a holiday ham is of cloves.

Because they like partial shade and only moderate sunshine, east or west windows are made to order for them. Our windows facing the Hudson River are deeply recessed, further shielding the azaleas from too much summer sun. For 15 years we have found them a friend to the busy, or lazy, indoor gardener. Contrary to most accepted attitudes toward azaleas, we find ours are tenacious, highly adaptive, disease-free and with good pest resistance. Like business corporations which have never omitted a dividend, our plants give back a rich payout in flowers indoors, year after year.

We grow only Hinodegiris, widely sold in pots in bloom around Easter and Mother's Day, rather than tackle any more exacting outdoor garden varieties. Though their spectacular rush-toflower from Thanksgiving through February is not matched in later months, our azaleas still steadily put out double blossoms till May.

These compact ornamental shruhs have taken any amount of frigidity to be found in New York apartments, short of no heat at all. The "forced" flowering in a window was a chance discovery, when I kept my first potted Hinodegiris and unexpectedly found it in blossom again six months later. I think our success is based on the fact that we can maintain indoors an approximation of the azaleas' natural environment. It's only what might be called their calendar "body clock" which has adjusted itself. In the

HARRIS SE process of adapting to a permanent cramped container life, with controlled light, air and water, our plants have somehow gratuitously extended their blossoming season to almost three times the eutdoor norm.

Pots of foliage plants are shifted to larger sizes as needed, but the azzless remain in their aeries all year around. The shelves-12 inches wide and %inch thick, each supported by two. strong metal brackets—are set two feet below the upper window frame, close to the pane, where the air is coldest. Plant windows are nailed shut against drafts and the azaleas are watered daily to offset low indoor humidity. Along the Hudson and the East Rivers, even September and October days can be on the cool side. In the chilly nights, the azaleas set their buds. Invariably our azaleas have been in bloom for Thanksgiving. In fact, they tend to push up their coming-out dates By the middle of November, each fat patient bud already showed a rim of the color inside.

These little shrubs require acid soil and should be kept moist, but not soggy. They may be grown in their original potting soil for two or three years, until roots outgrow the pot. Some experts advise annual repotting. When we repot, after watering we lift out the entire plant-root ball, soil and all and tuck it into the next larger azales pot, adding and firming in 50 percent peat moss. Azales pots are the squat, shallow ones. We use clay pots, since plastic ones, though easier to keep clean, tend to heat up in summer sun.

Moreover, Mr. Carter's advance teams from Georgia have concluded that some of the profusion of boards and councils at the White House have sapped Cabinet departments of policy initiative, only to atrophy themselves. For examp participants complain that little resi policy debate takes place at formal meetings of the National Security Council er of the Domestic Council, with its 24 Cabinet or sub-Cabinet members and its staff of 56. Often, these se merely ratify policies worked out by smaller groups. Further, the narrowly conceived division of issues into domestic and foreign affairs has sometimes left Presidents dangerously ill-equipped to make decisions on vital issues that cut across both, such as energy, economic policy, farm exports or nuclear power development. In 1971, for example, the economic package that suspended the convertibility of the dollar and imposed a 10 percent surcharge on imports was developed by a team of President Nixon's domestic advisers without State Department perticipation or diplomatic consultation with American allies. One painful consequence of this venture in economic nationalism was a major diplomatic crists with Japan when that country raised an outcry over the Nixon shocks to its trade patterns with America. The Carter transition team is now debating their remedies for these organizational allments. In deliberate contrast to the Nixon Presidency, Mr. Carter has declared he will have no White House chief of staff as a gatekeeper. Instead, he wants a circle of advisers, all with direct access to him, like spokes on a wheel."

Aides like Jack H. Watson Jr., his transition coordinator are urging Mr. Carter to cut the White House staff substantially and to eliminate several boards that are now a part of the Presidential bureaucracy. They include the Economic Policy Board, Council for International Economic Policy, and the Office of Telecommunications Policy. The staffs of the National Security Council and Domestic Council will probably be reduced, but if the Cabinet gains anthority, the Cabinet secretarist in the White House may grow along with it, and serve as a focal point for bringing together shifting clusters of Cabinet secretaries—foreign and domesticto deal with problems that affect them. The Carter camp prefers this ad hoc approach to setting up new structur that future Governments will have to dismantie

But the crucial issue for the Carter White House is less one of structure than of Mr. Carter's own style. A dilemma arises from his inclination to be a strong, activist President -with the consequent flow of power to his White House staff-and his contrary assertion that be intends to delegate authority to strong, independent, autonomous Cabinet officers whom he wants to be his main policy advisers.

"The White House staff will not be a palace guard giving commands to the rest of government," Mr. Watson said recently. "There will be very few people who will be authorized to pick up the phone and say, The President wants . . . " But almost immediately, he was explaining the President's need for an assertive staff to balance Cabinet heads pushing special policy concerns and interests of their departments at him. "He will constantly need a Presidential perspective on issues," Mr. Watson explained, "and the White House staff has to give him that perspective."

resident-elect Jimmy Carter has 7 made almost all of his top-level ointments, and his choices have firmed the first impression that he not going to stray far-as his apaign rhetoric had implied he ald—from the traditions of Cabinet

here was some frony in the fact t perhaps the most traditional rice of all, that of an old friend 1 political ally, former judge Griffin l, for Attorney General, was the y one that produced a strong negae reaction and may well encounter position in confirmation proceedings

Taken as a whole-which is the way has asked it be taken-here is how .. Carter's Cabinet looks:

Women and blacks. Mr. Carter had omised that his Cabinet would conn both women and blacks he had essed the plural—and he satisfied at commitment by naming Juanita eps, a vice president of Duke Unirsity, as Secretary of Commerce, and stricia Roberts Harris, a black oman who was Ambassader to Luxnbourg, as Secretary of Housing and rban Affairs, Earlier, Mr. Carter had sected a black, Andrew Young, as nited Nations Ambassador, a post est has technical cobinet status but msiderably less policy-making au-

Mr. Carter has said he had a difficult me finding women and blacks with te kind of experience that would valify them for the Cabinet. His intenion is to try to solve that problem or his successors by naming many sore women and minority group memers to the positions immediately telow the Cabinet level.

Familiar faces. The importance of inperience, in Mr. Carter's view, was tenonstrated by his selections last week He named Harold Brown for Secretary of Defense, Joseph Califano Health, Education and Welfare, James Schlesinger for assistant to the President on energy policy, and Theodore Sorensen for Director of Intelligence. All had served in other Admin-

The Carter selections also appear to have the general trait of being accepteble to the special constituencies usually consulted about Cabinet posts. In picking economist F. Ray Marshall, for Secretary of Labor, he chose a peron well-regarded by organized labor.

He also had adhered to custom by choosing a Midwesterner, Representative Bob Bergland of Minnesota, for Secretary of Agriculture, and a Western Governor, Cecil Andrus of Idaho, as Secretary of Interior. Another characteristic shared by most of the Carter appointees is that they have a reputation for being tough managers, and in many cases, strong personalities. Mrs. Kreps, for example, after being presented to the public on television by Mr. Carter, promptly announced that she disagreed with him about the availability; of qualified women. The presence of independent-minded persons in the Cabinet may help, as Mr. Carter says he intends, to assure that authority properly exercised by the secretaries is not usurped by the White House staff.

The reaction. Those who supported Mr. Carter for the Presidency because he pledged a treek approach were dismayed that his main administrators and advisors had conventioned backgrounds and fit comfortably into the usual mold of Presidential appointees. There was also disappointment that women and blacks apparently had not been seriously considered for the posts; generally regarded as the most critical those dealing with economic affairs, defense, diplomacy and secur-

Perhaps the most innovative stroke was putting Mr. Schlesinger's analytical talents, formerly displayed in de-fense and intelligence work in Republi-can Administrations, to use in attacking the nation's energy problems.

The Attorney General. To some of Mr. Carter's supporters the most objectionable choice was that of Mr. Bell, an Atlanta lawyer and former Federal appellate court judge, to be the Attorney General. The post has siways been a sensitive one, but even more so since Watergate demonstrated the possibilities for abuse in having the Government's prosecutorial arm headed by a close ally of the President, Yet Mr. Carter followed custom by appointing Mr. Bell, who is a personal friend and the law partner of Charles Kirbo, Mr. Carter's confident.

Mr. Bell has other liabilities for the President-elect. At the time he was named, he was a member of two Atlanta social clubs whose practice has been to exclude blacks and Jews. Mr. Carter made it clear that he felt it inappropriate for public officials ta belong to such organizations. Mr. Bell obliged by resigning, but reluctantly.

At first, Mr. Bell suggested that he might become an inactive member because 'I won't be in Washington forever." Later, he decided to resign because "the Attorney General is a symbol of equality before the law.".

Neither Mr. Bell nor Mr. Carter, however, said anything about the moral appropriateness of an appointee who, by personal and free choice, had joined a club with such restrictions. In many places in the country, including the South, the "best" clabs, by explicit rule or implicit understanding, exercise such exclusion; Some people join them in agreement with or in spite of those rules. Other people do not, because of those rules.

Charting Disaster

From top to bottom, the maps show (1) the general area in the Atlantic where oil spill occurred and then spread; (2) a blow-up of the spill location and its relation Nantucket Island; (3) a further blowup, showing ocean depths in fathoms on maritime map. The tanker needed at least 34 feet of water, it grounded in water only 18 feet deep. Later, pounded by heavy seas, it split spart

The Destructive Island of Oil

Crude oil, some of it as thick as pudding and polluting 2,850 square miles, has been set loose off the shore of Nantacket by a grounded tanker, and it has a destructive expecity that is essentially homeon to human aftera-

How much destruction the oil depends on which direction natural forces drive it, and oceanographers say they cannot tell precisely in advance; the oil is in an area (about 27 miles off Nantucket Island in the Atlantic) with shifting winds and currents: After it spilled last Tuesday and Wednesday, it first drifted northeastward, then southeastward. There are three possibilities now, none of them happy ones:

• If the oil eventually goes in a northeastward direction, it will befoul Georges Bank, the ocean's "mine" of fish that is the resource of a multi-million dollar industry, not only for American fishermen but for foreign vessels as well. The gummy oil will ruin clams, scallops, cod, flounder, haddock and whiting on which thousands of people depend for their living.

• If the slick turns landward, it could smother freshly laid lobster eggs floating near shore, destroy the tiny sea creatures on which fish and birds feed and ruln the beaches and shoreline that are one of the nation's main tourist attractions.

 The least damage would result if the oil were carried into the mid-Atlantic, away from shore and Georges Bank. However, experts believe that even there it would do long-lasting harm to the ecology, chiefly in ways not yet understood. It is known that the hydrocarbons in oil are toxic to phytopiankton, tiny ocean plants that produce oxygen, and to zoopiankton, animal organisms consumed as food by larger sea life.

Hole Oceanographic Institute and the National Marine Fisheries Service, oil close to the surface disrupts just one generation of fish, but oil that sinks to the bottom as it oxidizes and gets heavier can disturb generations of ocean life. Fortunately, ecological damage is less in winter than at other seasons: Fewer fish spawn in cold weather, and other biological activity is also at a low ebb.

The oil spilled from the Greek tanker Argo Merchant after it ran aground; the ship has a draft of 33.6 feet, it hit bottom where the depth, on marktime charts, is shown as 18 feet. The ship carried 7.5 million gallons of heavy oil.

It was the biggest spill off American shores, but there have been worse ones elsewhere. Though the spills get public attention, seagoing vessels discharge some oil routinely in the ocean's traffic lanes. The beaches of Bermuda, for instance, have at times been lined with oil globs that float in from a beavily traveled lane not far from the island.

Pregnancy Pay: A Different Opinion

issues, the New York State Court of Appeals has rendered a decision dismetrically opposed to that of the United States Supreme Court in the matter of disability benefits for pregnant

On Dec. 7, the Supreme Court suled 6 to 3 that Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, which prohibits job discrimination due to race, religion, national origin or sex, does not require employers to provide disability benefits for pregnant women. The Court found that pregnancy is a unique condition and that refusal to cover it is not a refusal to cover people because of sex but only a refusal to cover that special condition.

Now the New York Court of Appeals, the state's highest court, has found that New York's Human Rights Law, which is substantially identical with Federal law as respects job discrimination against women, does indeed require private employers to furnish disability benefits for pregnancy. The Court of Appeals based its reasoning on its own decisions in the past, and did not explicitly confront the Supreme Court's decision.

In a footnote, however, the Court of Appeals observed that "the determination of the Supreme Court, while instructive, is not binding on our court." The issue in New York was complicated by the existence of the state's Disability Benefits Law, which specifically excludes disability resulting from pregnancy. The Court of Apbeals had to decide which of the two laws governed existing circumstances, and found in favor of the Human.

Rights Law.

The New York decision does not establish eny particular period of time during which pregnant women would be entitled to disability benefits. It merely requires that employers supply the same benefits to pregnant women that employees disabled from some other cause would receive.

The economic effect of the decision may be substantial. A friend-of-thecourt brief filed by a coalition of some of the state's largest employers asserted that requiring them to pay for pregnancy-related disabilities would cost "at least tens of millions of dollars annually." One employer directly involved in the litigation, Crouse-Irving Memorial Hospital in Syracuse, estimated that its disability insurance premiums would double from $104,000 to $208,000.

Both New Jersey and Connecticut have statutes guaranteeing benefits in pregnancy - related disabilities.

Egypt and Syria Coordinate; Rabin Cancels Coalition

Egypt and Syria have announced they are to coordinating policies in anticipation of new Middle East peace talks but they may have to wait longer than expected to get to Geneva. An unexpected domestic political crisis de-veloped in Israel last week, and national elections there in the spring almost certainly will delay the start of substantive negotiations until well into

Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin of Isreel now heads a caretaker Government, having formally resigned after expelling from his coalition cabinet an Orthodox Jewish party that had been an uncertain ally at best, but had ena-bled the predominantly Labor Party Government to hold a narrow majority in the Knesset. Parliamentary elections, originally scheduled for next November, now are expected in May.

There was speculation that Mr. Rabin had acted to have a freer hand in preparing for peace talks—and to give his opponents in the Labor Party and opposition groups less time to organize a challenge to his leadership. However, it is doubtful that he can engage in meaningful negotiations without a new mandate from the Isracii people.

The Prime Minister, who has said he would return some of the Arab territory Israel captured in the 1967 war in exchange for secure borders, is considered a moderate within the Labor Party, whose members range from opponents of any territorial concessions to those who would relinquish atmost all occupied Arab land in return for a stable peace. The largest opposition party, the Likud, and the Orthodox groups (the National Religious Party and the United Torah Front) refuse to concede any territory and have impeded Government efforts to limit Jewish settlement in the occupied

Mr. Rabin expelled the National Religious Party from the cabinet after nine of its ten deputies abstained in a confidence vote. The expulsion left the Government coalition with 57 otes, four less than a majority in the

Although the Orthodox parties represent only one third of the Israel population, they have had considerable influence on social legislation, blocking such reforms as legalization of civil marriages and abortion for nonmedical reasons, because they have provided the margin for successive Labor Party majorities in parliament.

Egypt and Syria say they have decided to form a "united political leadership," a step intended more to increase pressure for a resumption of peace talks than to signal an eventual merger of the two countries.

Arab nationalists have dreamt of an alliance stretching from the Atlantic to the Indian Ocean for decades, but small-scale unions declared in the past all bave unraveled.

The late Gamal Abdel Nasser of Egypt, an aggressive exponent of Arab unity, allied his nation with Syria in 1958 to form the United Arab Republic. The name persisted for 10 years, although Syria, objecting to Mr. Nasser's dominance, withdrew in 1961. His attempt to resurrect the union in 1963. with the inclusion of Iraq, died within months. His successor, Anwar ei-Sadat, entered a loose Federation of Arab Republics with Syria and Libya in 1971. This federation still exists. but it has played no practical role for

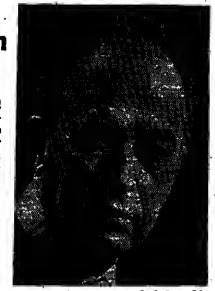

Syria and Egypt lack the contiguous borders, complementary economies and political similarities that make true union viable, but they have been brought together by Saudi Arabia after more than a year of feuding and the tactical alliance appears likely to stick for a while, provided conditions in the Arab world remain stable.

Syria has been given a free hand to impose peace in Lebanon, where its army has begun closing critical newspapers and introducing other elements of martial law. Rival Lebanese and Palestinian factions have yet to disarm, however, and clashes continue between a Syrian-controlled Palestinian group and one that opposes a settlement with Israel.

More Terror In Rhodesia

The killing of 27 tea plantation laborers, all blacks, has raised the use of terror to a higher level of intensity in Rhodesia's civil war. Black nationalists apparently committed the crimealthough some nationalists said the slayings had been committed by a black counterinsurgency unit of the Rhodesian Army.

Guerrillas had twice warned the plantation workers to quit their jobs as part of a campaign to undercut the economic base of the Government of Prime Minister Ian D. Smith. If the shootings were committed by nationalists, they were appar-

Mr. Smith's regime obviously saw a propaganda advantage in the episode. Foreign reporters were taken to the scene, Rhodesian officials suggested an impartial outside panel investigate the killings. The apparent intention of these actions was to portray the guerrillas as ruthless butchers. with whom it was pointless to negotiate. Great publicity accorded the killings in South Africa has increased support for the Smith regime among white South Africans.

The killings, plus raids by Rhodesian forces into neighboring Botswana, skirmishing along the Mozamblque border and rising antagonisms among the black guerrilla groups, have made the search for a negotiated peace more

Ivor Richard, the British chairman of the Geneva talks, sets off this week for a round of talks in Southern Africa. Before his departure, he listed four possible alternatives for getting around one of the principal obstacles to peace, how to administer police and justice in a transition period. What he didn't say is that all have been rejected by Ian.Smith.

The nations of the European Economic Community and the Soviet Union have Joined a widening list of countries that, because of the failure of five international conferences in three years to approve a "law of the are unilaterally assuming the right to determine who may fish withes of the Events this month had elements of retaliation. The Soviet Union announced Dec. 10 that it was extending its limit. The Common Market, whose extended zone goes into effect Jan. 1, announced days later that the Russians and East Europeans had until Merch 31 to negotiate reciprocal fishing agreements or quit the shared waters of its nine member nations. In the interim, sharply reduced quotes were set for the Eastern trawlers.

The United States and Canada announced last year that their new fishing zones would become effective March 1 and Jan. 1, respectively. The extensions are anticipating an interna-tional treaty, whose draft calls for 200mile exclusive offshore economic zones, and protecting the large coastal nations' reserves in the event no treaty is signed. The possibility also exists that they are bargaining tactics for the sea-law conference, which is due to resume discussions in May.

The losers in the process are the landlocked and lesser coastal nations that depend on fishing for commerce or diet, such as Japan, Singapore, Tai-wan, South Korea and the East European countries. In the case of the United States, they will be allowed to trawl in the restricted area only if a surplus

Spain Still Wary Of Communists

Since he returned to Spain Elegally last February after years of exile abroad, Santiago Carrillo, the Spanish Communist Party leader, seemed intent on provoking the Government to arrest him. Last week he was successful: He and seven other leading Communists were arrested.

The arrests were followed by demonstrations throughout Spain and by protests from abroad. The result was that the Government of Prime Minister Adolfo Suarez was emberrassed and there was speculations that the police had perhaps made the arrests without the Government's ap-

The New Arab Expressions of Moderation Lend Urgency to Discussion

Israel Is Debating The Risks Of Peace

By WILLIAM E. PARRELL

JERUSALEM-, The terms for a Middle East pea settlement—what if any concessions Israel can afford to make to end its prolonged state of hostility with its Arab neighbors—have been the subject of debate for years. The discussion has assumed new urgency because the Arabs are expressing (1) a new moderation, and (2) a desire to resume peace talks in Geneva. It is the official Israeli view that this softening of Arab rhetoric is merely skillful propaganda, not a real shift in Arab opposition to the existence of the state of Israel, Nevertheless, the prevailing view here is that a peace initiative in 1977 is inevitable and that Israel, after the histus afforded by the Lebenese war and the American Presidential campaign, must be prepared to participate on the most favorahie terms it can achieve.

Any new talks will involve very complex issues: the status of the territories Israel has occupied since the 1967 war, Israel's commitment to retain defensihie borders and not return to her pre-1967 perimeters; a resolution of the plight of the Palestinians; and what Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin calls "s qualitative change in the system of relations between the Arabs and Israel." Peace, Mr. Rabin says, means a free flow of people and goods between Israel and the Arab countries, an almost utopian definition given the current reality.

Israell views, inside and outside the Government, on what the country's negotiating posture: should be cover a bread spectrum. There are extreme doves, who feel that a return to the 1967 lines and recognition of the Palestine Liberation Organization are necessary for a settlement, extreme hawks, who urgeretention and settlement of all the captured land, no matter what the implications for peace, and many voices in between, occasionally at odds with each other on some issues, but overlapping on others. Dominating the discussion is the ingrained feeling that a major policy blunder could severely imperil this small, but militarily powerful state.

On the question of negotisting with the Palestine Liberation Organization, the Government has so far refused to recognize the body and said it would return to Geneva only with the other nations represented at initial talks in 1973. This would exclude

Despite recent statements by the Palestinians indicating that they are moderating their demands, Govment officials quickly point out that the organization's covenant still calls for the dissolution of Israel. Reports that Palestinian leaders would now content aselves with an independent state composed of the West Bank of Jordan and the Gaza Strip are coolly received in official Israeli circles. Such a state the officials say, leaving aside the question of whether it would be economically viable, would only be a way station on the road to the long stated Palestinian -a secular state incorporating Israel.

Israeli foreign ministry officials reject the idea of a single Arab delegation at Geneva, reported to be under Arab consideration, as a subterfuge for a back door admission of the Paiestinians. One delegation makes no sense, they argue, since Israel has specific and separate border issues to negotiate with Jordan, Syria and Egypt.

A contrary view was recently stated by Davar,

the ruling Labor Party's newspaper. It question of secure and recognized bord issues can and must be discussed with state separately. But the Palestinian qu find its solution only in the context of a representation. There is no point to any Isra torial concession in any sector without a assurance that the Palestinian issue has be factorily settled."

Israeli leaders constantly talk of the neecure and defensible borders, but they have fined the term. The location of 70 Jewish set: either planned or built, on the West Bank Golan Heights, however, gives some idea. much land the Government apparently im retain. Beyond that, the occupied areas a tiable. "For less than full peace we're pren less territorial concessions," one foreign mir ficial said.

Opposition Views

On the right, there is substantial support position argued by very Orthodox Jews, that have the right to settle in the occupied Judea and Samaria, since these territories of the Jews' biblical homeland. Some armch porters of settlements in these areas disci religious rationale, but back retention of as conforming to basic Zionist ideals.

On the left, there is a strong feeling th represents a major opportunity for Israeli-A prochement. This is so, some leftists argue. part because the Arabs are now united in the tion that a solution to the Palestinians' de a homeland must be found in order to aver Lebanons. Others on the left feel that to igr present momentum for peace would create a that could lead to another Middle East war.

The debate over a peace settlement-what it be, what risks it can entail, how much inten ressure Israel can resist, how unyielding Israel be without alienating the United States-has enmeshed in domestic politics. Israel is in the of campaigning for early parkamentary el next spring, with Mr. Rabin seeking re-electi facing strong opposition from within his own Party. Moshe Dayan, the former defense using a critic of Mr. Rabin, has warned the Labor against including a plank in its platform p territorial concessions on the West Bank in ex for peace. Such a plank, he argues, would enc. the United States to pressure Israel to gra concessions without a fair return.

Many critiques, plans, proposals, compromis arguments—both here and in the international—are in the offing for 1977. In the meantin idyll of peace in the Middle East is still just a

José Ramon Lasuen of the Social Democratic Federal

Spanish Politician: One Man's Very Different Life

By JAMES M. MARKHAM

MADRID-Four years ago, José Ramon Lasuen resigned as the head of the economics faculty at Madrid's Autonomous University after police stormed onto the campus to break up demonstrations, Last year, a few months before Generalissimo Francisco. Franco died, the Government confiscated Mr. Lasuen's passport

· Today, the intense, trenchent Mr. Lascen, one of Spain's most highly regarded economiets, is a whiciing dervish of the emerging political order, crisecrossing the nation in search of candidates and activists for his party, the Social Democratic Federation. His goal is not modest. Sometime next year he hopes the party will gain enough votes to be a necessary partner in the center-right or center-left coalition that is likely to be Spain's first democratically, elected government in 41 years. Scores of other Spanlards are pursuing the same dream, organizing parties at all points of the political spectrum. The sudden intensification of their, and Mr. Lasuen's, political activity is a measure of the changes that have occurred in Spain since Franco died.

Even in the last enfeebled years of Franco's reign, recalls Mr. Lasuen, there was little room for anything but testimonial politics, meetings of a dozen or so people to sign the odd protest petition and plot for the future. Today, Spain is far from being a democracy. Like most parties to the left of the center, Mr. Lasuen's Social Democratic Federation is technically illegal, since it has refused to submit its charter to the Government for approval. Prime Minister Adolfo Suárez, who sometimes consults Mr. Lasuen on economic matters, still has the power to say which parties may exist in Spain, a vestige. of autocracy that the economist and others find unac-

This technical illegality means that requests to provincial or town officials to hold meetings are sometimes, seemingly capriciously, denied. The right of free assembly is not yet a reality in King Juan Carlos' Spain. "We have had several meetings sus-pended," says Mr. Lasuen, whose finent English comes from studies at the London School of Economics, Oxford and Stanford, "But that depends a lot on the ups and downs of the democratization process. In the big cities, there are no problems. In the smaller towns, both the authorities and the public are scared. And when we get down to the villages, the difficulties multiply,"

Most politicians expect that Mr. Suarez will eventually lift the paternalistic requirement that parties must pass through what is called the Government's little window to acquire legal status, as well as seek permission to hold meetings. Without waiting for those steps, Mr. Lasuen and his friends are building a party they describe as extremely similar to the Democratic Party in the United States. "We are trying to respond to the public's wishes with programs, rather than try to convert the public with - an ideology," he says. "We want to make the midclass the center of the Spanish political spectra. What we want to avoid is a repetition of 1936, wh the middle classes fell into the laps of the up

His party, which now has a membership of 5.0. is actually a collection of regional parties allied, a central organization in Madrid, Mr. Lasten see its prospective candidates among men like himse relatively youthful professionals who are respect in their fields. Those preferred are "people under t economists, professors, doctors, teachers, indepen ent farmers, entrepreneurs. And women, too."

A Family History

Mr. Lasuen is often accompanied by his wife, Ca men, on the campaign trail, something still nor in Spain, notably when he visits his home town; Alcaniz in northeastern Teruel Province, w probably will be his constituency. There, as a chil during the civil war, he remembers being cared by the famed International Brigades. His father, centrist Republican, was jailed, first by hostile and chists, later by the victorious Franco forces.

As the driving force behind the Social Democratic Federation, Mr. Lasuen spends 80 percent of his time out of Madrid, and he chides other politicians in spending too much time in the capital. He concer trates his travels in Spain's so-called industrial triali-gie, which runs from Madrid to Barcelona and Bilbad aiming for the middle class that he hopes will beck a center-left party in the perliamentary elections that are to be held by next June.

Asked about finances, Mr. Lasnen grouns. "We beg, and pray. We are financing the party out of our own pockets. That's good. The decisions people take are more serious when they're paying themselves.

The Death of Richard Daley

Mayor Richard Daley of Chicago, who presided for 21 years over what was probably the nation's most powerful urban political organization, has died at 74, leaving a vacuum in city, state and national politics that no angle individual is likely to fill exactly as he did.

Because Mr. Daley considered it imprudent to groom an heir apparent, his death has set off a struggle for succession among several factions in Chicago that will end in a mayoral election within six months. A leader as powerful as he is unlikely to emerge, however, because Mr. Daley's strength was based on his holding simultaneously two posts, the mayorally and chairmanship of the Cook County Democratic Committee. None of Mr. Daley's possible successors is expected to secure both positions.

The political system that Mr. Daley perfected, however, is considered likely to survive him. Under that system, a precinct level party organization insured the votes that kept the Democrats in control of the city government, in return, the Deley organizationrewarded its adherents with municipal jobs and services and with favors. Although similar arrangements had once been common elsewhere, no other big city mayor in recent times had been able to achieve quite the degree of control that Mayor Daley enjoyed during six terms in office.

مملدامند الماصل

Mayor Daley's supporters maintained that he was a benevolent autocrat, using his power to assure efficiency and fiscal solvency and to promote new construction.

But the fact is that despite the Daley stewardship Chicago suffers from the same ills that afflict many large cities, including poor schools, physical decay, official corruption and substantial, obvious segregation of the city's black

Mr. Daley's domination of Chicago gave him a major influence in Illinois state politics, and the state's large bloc of electoral votes made him a person to be courted by Democrats trying to become President, and even by Republicans seeking his approval. His power was demonstrated most vividly at the 1968 Democratic National Convention in Chicago, which he controlled, at times physically, on behalf of his candidste, Hubert Humphrey. Outside the convention hall, the Mayor's police force dispersed antiwar demonstrators in a bloody confrontation.

At the time of Mr. Daley's death, however, there were indications that his power was beginning to erode at all three levels of government. The Mayor's organization had recently lost control of a key Chicago prosecutorial post, and in the last election Mr. Daley's candidate for governor and the Democratic Presidential nominee both failed to carry the state,

Just-in-Case Campaign Funds

The necessity of raising and spending money to beat an opponent in a Congressional race is obvious, but less clear is any urgent need for unopposed candidates to solicit and receive campaign contributions. Yet this year 50 members of the new Congress, who had no opponents accepted over $3 million. They still have nearly $1 million of it, and under current law that surplus is available for any lawful polifical or personal use they choose.

How do the members of Congress explain this? Their rationale is that a campaign fund is needed by them to scare off prospective opponents and to keep their names before their constituents to guard against future challengers. In many cases, the funds are raised before the candidate knows if he is going to be opposed. If its later use is personal and not political, the interest groups seeking access to legislators who might favor their goals. Contributions to unopposed candidates are legally contributions, not gifts. Whether they are morally or practically different from gifts was not a subject of serious discussion in the successive debates over reform of the Federal campaign law. Presumably that question got lost in the arguments over the technicalities in the 106 pages that now constitute the law.

A Corporate Twist

There are elways twists on twists. A Firestone Tire and Rubber Company andit committee has reported that its former chief financial officer masterminded an intricate plan, involving complicated foreign exchange routes, under which at least $1.16 million was collected in 20 bank accounts for distribution to political candidates in the United States.

What is not at all clear, apparently, is how much of that money went to the candidates, how much went to the official, Robert P. Beasley, and how much is left. During the course of its investigation, the committee said, Mr. Beasley invoked the Fifth Amendment against self-incrimination.

Payments from such funds would be questionable or illegal.

One difficulty in forming independent assessments is that Mr. Jordan has declined to disclose Conrail's own detailed projections. A representative of the private railroads complained: "They say they're doing better than expected but they won't say what they expected." One recurrent problem for Conrail is controlling its own bureaucracy. The corporation is struggling, in the words of one official, "to bringthe beast under control." Employing about 100,000 persons and more than a score of executives in the top management team Conrall has been referred to by railroaders as "Pennrail," an unkind alhision to the unwieldy line that became the major part of the new system.

Meanwhile, Conrall and the other rallroads are striving for a modus vivendi. In some places, Conrail competes with the Chessis, the Southern, the Norfolk & Western and other railroads. But Conrail interconnects with these railroads in other places, sending its cars on their routes and taking eir cars on its routes. "Living with Conrail is like sleeping alongside an elephant," said Hays T. Watkins, chairman of the Chessie. You feel every twitch." Recently some of the twitches annoyed the Chessie and the Norfolk & Western. The railroads complained that Conrail was changing shippers instructions, even to the point of altering manifests, to cut the other lines out and transport cargoes alone. --

Amtrak and Conrail

Courail is a federally sponsored, private railroad corporation formed from six bankrupt lines in the Northeast and Midwest. It carries 13 percent of the nation's freight and 370,000 commuter passengers daily. Amtrak is a Government-supported, quasi-public railroad corporation set up in 1971 to assume the costly burden of intercity passenger service. Trains traveling its routes, encompassing 46 states, carried traveling its routes, encompassing 46 states, carried 18 million passengers last year. There are also 55 private railroads with no Government connection, carrying 87 percent of the nation's freight and a minuscule number of passengers.

However, Mr. Lewis, who is a kind of official Conrail watchdog, called the charges baseless and attributed them to competitive pressures.

The fear of many persons in the railroad industry is than an economic collapse by Conrail in its present corporate form may produce a demand for direct Federal operation. of the system. In the face of that threat to private enterprise, a sense of unity prevails in the industry. "We rely on Con-rail," said Mr. Claytor of the Norfolk & Western. "We do want them to succeed. They have to succeed."

Michigan Decides It Knows A Way to Run a Railroad

By REGINALD STUART

The State of Michigan has decided, reluctantly, to plungs into the railroad business after an absence of more than 125 years because the alternative was to lose all railroad service along nearly 1,000 miles of track, serving 86 small towns and numerous shippers in the primarily rural sections of the lower perinsular. It was a gamble that will ultimately cost Michigan's taxpayers many millions of dollars, but the alternative might have cost even more,

The mileage taken over by the state had been scheduled for abandonment under the federally-sponsored reorganization of bankrupt rail carriers into the Consolidated Rail Corporation, threatening the movement of essential agricultural, forestry and industrial commodities within Michigan and to connecting carriers taking the goods elsewhere. To evert that threat, the state bought the bankrupt Ann Arbor railroad, its rolling stock and portions of its 300-mile roadbed. From Coursil the state lessed the rest of the readbed and 562 miles of Penn Central track that was also to have been abandoned.

; Conrail is operating the Ann Arbor for the state under contract. The old Penn Central track, much of it in bad shape, is being used by two new private shortline rail companies, the Hillsdale County Railroad Company and the Michigan Northern Railroad Company. The operating companies are getting state subsidies to offset their losses. Michigan expects to pay $11 million in subsidies this fiscal year alone. The annual subsidy required to keep rail traffic moving could total $50 million within five years, budget analysts say, and there is no guarantee that private enterprise will ever come back to free the state of the responsibility for running trains. The last time Michigan found itself operating railroads was just after it schieved statehood in 1837. The state built two lines to foster development, but sold them to private operators about 15 years later because of a cor-

Michigan's re-entry into the railroad business follows nearly 20 years of gradual withdrawal and abandonment of service by private carriers seeking to eliminate unprofita-ble or marginal routes. The culmination of that trend was the bankruptcy of the Penn Central, which served much of the western part of the lower peninsula from north to south, and of the Ann Arbor, which was the backbone of rail service from the northwest of the peninsula to the southeastern part.

The inevitable result of abandonment would have been closed factories and lost jobs. Some examples: the Michigan Sugar Company, which is the major employer in the town of Caro (population 8,000) and which relies almost totally on railroads to ship its molasses and dry beet pulp, would have been put in jeopardy; the Martin Marietta Company in Sand Lake would have shut its fertilizer supply operation. The subsidies for the rescue effort are now provided by part of the state's gasoline tax. For the future, the legislature is considering establishing a consolidated transportation fund drawn from the gasoline and other taxes.

augh most of the recent recession, bills designed to t unemployment by creating emergency jobs bounced in Capitol Hill and the White House. The Democratic ess would pass multi-billion-dollar measures calling panded programs of public service employment and works; President Ford would veto them on fiscal hilosophic grounds, and ultimately scaled-down verional joblessness is still above 8 percent. But now, believers in the efficacy of emergency job programs be installed at both ends of the legislative shuttle. lent-elect Jimmy Carter has declared his personal belief job creation deserves priority over a tax cut as a stimulus for the economy, and his appointees to abor and Commerce Cabinet posts are outstanding siasts for strong Government job initiatives.

st of the job-generating plans under contemplation ineal descendants of those initiated more than four les ago by President Franklin D. Roosevelt as weapons st the Great Depression that pushed nearly a quarter e labor-force out of work. The mainstays of the New assault on mass idleness were two. The Works Progress nistration, a Government-operated relief program, emed more than 3 million people in 1938 alone, at everyfrom raking leaves to painting murals; the Public Works Administration, a heavy construction program, left airports, dams, post offices and other community improvements built under private contract across the country.

The pulling and hauling between President Ford and Congress produced two modest counterparts of those agencies. One is a multi-faceted public service employment program that now provides roughly 310,000 jobs, most of them in state and municipal agencies, at an annual cost of $2.7 billion in Federal funds. ...

That program is conducted under various updates of the Comprehensive Employment and Training Act of 1973. Its last incarnation limits hiring to persons jobless at least 15 weeks and from families with incomes under $6,700 a year. The act allocates an additional $1.9 billion for on-thejob training and special work projects for youths and senior citizens. Over $1 billion more goes for such youth projects as the Job Corps, a carryover from Presidnt Lyndon B. Johnson's War on Poverty, and summer jobs.

The linchpin of this jumble, the public service employment program, drew much initial criticism because too few of those hired were from the hard-core unemployed and because many communities found the program a handy way to substitute Federal dollars for local taxes in operating regular civil service departments, Recent revisions require that new local ventures would have to involve short-term projects that do not compete with standard governmental ture consists of state and local public works that have not yet begun. Preliminary notice went out last week that 2,000 projects had been chosen to receive the $2 billion Congress authorized for this purpose by overriding a Ford veto last July.

The measure's Congressional sponsors have predicted that the public works money, coupled with companion allowances of $1.25 billion antirecession revenue sharing and $700 million to abate water pollution, will create 300,000 jobs within 15 months. Mr. Ford put the probable increase at half that figure. An indication that even the Ford estimate may be too generous was an inadvertent by-product of Mayor Beame's jubilant announcement that New York City was getting $102.2 million of the new Federal public works cash. City Hall's estimate of the number of construction jobs to be created here was only 2,500. That cost ratio translates out to $40,000 a job, and to not more than 50,000 jobs at the national level.

Under the press of special pleaders, from the United States Conference of Mayors to the construction unions, the new administration is likely to request more money for public works. But its primary emphasis will be on public service, not public works, as the device with the biggest bang for the buck in jobs.

Nineteen manpower specialists joined last week in estimating that it would cost five to eight times as much to create new jobs through a tax cut as it would through expanding public jobs. The relative cost effectiveness of more public works was put roughly halfway between the two. One thing that gave the report, based on Congressional Budget Office data, extra interest was the inclusion among its signers of F. Ray Marshall, Secretary of Labor-designate.

Though the panel recommended $2 billion more for public works and $1 billion more for on-the-job training, it urged that the public service total be raised to a million jobs. That is more than triple its present level, and would cost an extra $5 billion a year, And the Government's National Commission for Manpower Policy, to which Commerce Secretary-designate Juanita M. Kreps belongs, has just advocated a doubling of public service employment as part of a broad jobs approach that would add $4.5 billion to current outlays over a two-year period.

Not everybody agrees that this is the best approach. A strong dissent comes from the new chief economist of the United States Chamber of Commerce, Jack W. Carison, a former assistant director of the Office of Management and Budget. He believes that a permanent cut in witholding taxes, plus tax incentives for more capital investment by industry, which presumably would create private sector jobs, would be vastly preferable. An intermediate program that would couple more public jobs with a substantially increased emphasis on subsidized on-the-job training in the private sector is being pressed by Prof. Bernard E. Anderson of the University of Pennsylvania and other close campaign associates of the Presidentelect. Mr. Carter and his new Cabinet lean in that direction. But their jumping-off point will almost certainly be a quick step-up in public service employment to a half-million jobs or more. That move would still leave room for a tax cut if

Help for City: Someone Has To Go First

New York City appears to be involved in a subtle and complex game in its effort to find $1 billion for its litigant noteholders. To win, the city apparently must convince each side in a position to help that the others will do their share

But Mayor Beame, Governor Carey and other city officials told Senator William Proxmire, chairman of the Banking Committee, last week that they had so far failed to reach agreement with the banks and municipal employee pension funds to help redeem $1 billion in short-term notes.

Mr. Beame said that both banks and funds had indicated that Washington "should be involved" at least to the extent of issuing "an expression of Federal attitude" toward long-term budgetary relief. Several weeks ago. Victor Gothaum, leader of the largest municipal union, said he would not commit any more pension-fund money unless Washington participated.

The city's strategy apparently was to convince Mr. Proxmire that these sources stood adament. The Senator had said earlier that the city should not expect any more Federel help. It is possible he was thereby putting pressure on the banks and funds.

The Senate session ended with Mr. Proximire saying it was premature to discuss futher Federal assistance.

A major unknown in this game is what part Janmy Carter might play. The President-elect has promised consideration for New York City and others in similar straits, but has pledged no specific aid.

What the city needs most, some observers believe is a Federal guarantee of its securities. Then it could float long-term bonds to raise the cash to help pay off its noteholders and presumably get the banks and funds to assist. The city has been unable to sell bonds or notes on its own in the private market since early in 1975. The lockeying among the various money blocs goes on because the city faces no immediate deadline to meet the notes. But that situation may not continue for long. The state's Court of Appeals, although insisting that no payment solution harm the city's financial recovery, bas nonetheless said that the noteholders are entitled to their money. The court may eventu-'ally set a deadline if the city is unable to raise the money relatively soon.

It's an election year, and officials In Nassau and Westchester Counties in New York have adopted only small budget increases and have actually reduced county property taxes. They have been able to do so, despite increased demands for social services and generally rising costs, in part by reducing some employment rolls and minor services, but meinly (perticularly in Nassau) by relying on increases in other taxes. Thus, for many, tax relief is illusory.

The property tax cuts in both counties will reduce the homeowner's tax burden by little if at all. School district, other special district and town or village taxes represent most of his bill, and they are going up in almost all cases. In Nassau, the County Board of Supervisors cut the property tax by 19.5 cents to $7.25 for $100 of assessed valuation, which will save an average bomeowner $14 a year.

The cuts in the $1.04 billion budget will apparently be satisfied in part by iob attrition and cuts in spending for

The tax cuts can also be made, however, because the county added a penny increase in the sales tax (it is now 8 cents on the dollar) last September. That will cost the average family

In Westchester, the Board of Legislators adopted a budget of $398.3 million and will allow property taxes to decline by 20 cents, to $21.92 for $1,000 of assessed valuation, an average saving of $3 to $4 per home. These trims also will include the loss of jobs through attrition and tha reduction of some social programs, such as subsidized transit for senior

Mr. Nadjari Can't Win

Three more indictments obtained by Maurice H. Nadjari, the former Special out for insufficient evidence, Mr. Nadjari has now lost, for a variety of procedural reasons, almost all the major indictments against political figures and judges that he obtained in his last six months in office, and his methods could make him liable to disciplinary action by the bar.

In recent weeks indictments have been dismissed against Carmine G. De Sapio, former Tammany Hall leader; former Justice Joseph A. Brust, and Surrogata Samuel DiFalco.

The indictments thrown out last week involved charges against Patrick J. Cunningham, Bronx County Democratic chairman, and Judge Anthony J. Mercorella.

Mr. Nadjari was dismissed a year ago by Governor Carey, who was critical of his performance, but his tenure was extended for six months after he publicly questioned the Governor's motives. The courts have declared that in his rush to indict in that period, Mr. Nadjari exceeded his authority, engaged in unjustified wiretapping, and misused grand juries.

The New York State Commission of Investigation has accused Mr. Nadjarl of baving deliberately disclosed information to the press that "improperly tarnished" numerous officials. It has asked the Bar of the City of New York to consider disciplinary action.

State vs. City On Medicaid

Placing the blame for the widespread fraud and abuse in New York City's Medicaid mills is as confused as the administration of the bealth care program itself.

First, New York State announced last week it was going to relieve the city of its investigative role and centralize the effort under the state because, it said, the city had failed to develop proper procedures to find fraud and bad done poorly in obtaining restitution from guilty doctors. City officials defeoded their record and accused the state of hampering its enforcement by setting rigid requirements for prosecution.

Theo the Federal Department of Health, Education and Welfare accused both city and state of lax enforcement. At the same time, a report by a joint state legislative commission found a situation of constant feuding between state and city that hurt enforcement and said the state should not interfere with city efforts.

Where all this leaves enforcement of a seriously flewed program is not

How Well Do Grand Juries Work

By DENA KLEIMAN

On any weekday in New York City, as many as two dozen grand juries meet with prosecutors in secret to consider whether suspected criminals should be indicted and brought to trial

In recent months, procedures used by prosecutors in questioning witnesses, presenting evidence and drawing indictments have been criticized as a number of indictments by Maurice H. Nadjari, the former Special State Prosecutor, and others have been dismissed because of prosecutorial

These dismissals underscore what an increasing number of legislators, lawyers and judges believe is a need to revise the grand jury system and institute new safeguards to curb prosecutorial abuse.

In the last month, indictments brought by Mr. Nadjariagainst Justice Joseph A. Brust, Carmine De Sapio and Patrick J. Cunningham bave been dismissed. In addition, a State Supreme Court Justice has indicated he would dismiss a perjury and bribery indictment against Justice Irving H. Saypol and the Appellate Division has upheld the dismis of an indictment brought by Charles J. Hynes, now the Special Procecutor, against Afbert H. Elumenthal, the outgoing State Assembly Majority Leader.

In each case, judges said that prosecutors relied on insufficlent evidence or that they misled witnesses into perjury charges when nothing more substantive could be established. What is there about a grand jury proceeding that lends itself to prosecutorial abuse? How have critics said the system should be changed? The grand jury, composed of 23 persons, is said to date from 1161 in England, the time of King Henry II, when it was formed to protect the power of the monarch. Over the years its purpose evolved into a safeguard against arbitrary prosecution. England abandoned the system in 1933 as outmoded and too costly. Charges now are made by prosecutors. two functions. One type of grand jury hears evidence after an arrest. The grand jurors must decide, by a vote of at least 12, if there is sufficient cause for an indictment. If the suspect is indicted, he faces trist.

A second type of grand jury investigates criminal wrongdoing and accordingly is vested with great power. It can subpoena and question anyone who may help its inquiry. Those who refuse to testify can be held in contempt and

In both, the prosecutor stands before the grand jurors as legal adviser. Theoretically, he may not attempt to influence them. But in practice, there is often little doubt how a prosecutor feels about a case, and because grand jurors often look to prosecutors for guidance, much as petit jurors look to a judge during a trial, prosecutors can influence the outcome of an inquiry. Critics contend that investigatory grand juries invite prosecutorial abuse—which can result in phony perjury dictments based on misleading questions—and that guards are needed to insure the system's integrity. It say that indicting grand juries have become archaic. rubber stamps for a prosecutor, and should be abolished.

"Prosecutorial abuse is real," said Assemblyman State Pink, Democrat of Brooklyn, Chairman of the State Asse hly's Codes Committee, which issued a report on such also last May and plans hearings this session on revising investigatory grand jury. "Our feeling is that the gra-jury was originally designed to serve as a buffer better the government and the people. It no longer does."

Mr. Fink's committee and one in Washington, a subject mittee of the House Judiciary Committee chaired by Jeen Eilberg, Democrat of Pennsylvania, are considering the · Permitting witnesses to have a lawyer inside the gra jury room. In 41 states, including New York, New Je and Connecticut, a lawyer must remain outside the soon so there is no one present to object to a misleading question in 1974, the New York Legislature passed a hill promising for counsel inside the room, but it was vetoed by Govern Carey who said there was insufficient evidence that we a change was needed.

 Informing witnesses of the line of inquiry before they appear so that they are better prepared.

· Informing a witness of his rights, including the right to counsel and the right to remain silent if an answer would tend to incriminate him, before he is called inside: the grand jury room.

· Restricting rules of evidence and procedure to those that apply during a trial. A prosecutor is under less restrictions during a grand jury proceeding than he is at trial.

Those opposed to changing the investigatory grand-inty system argue that it is not designed to be an advisory proceeding but rather a search for the truth. They may that the presence of a witness lawyer might make low that the presence of a witness lawyer night make or objections that could bog down the proceeding, and that a grand jury should operate with vast latitude and out critics of change also argue that historically the proof jury has worked well that it is one of the rare inspitalious that provide for community participation in the simulation of justice and that most prosecutors are responsible lawyers who conduct the proceedings accordingly.

With respect to the indicting grand jury, long considered a rubber stamp, twenty-nine states have allowed the procecutor to bypass this panel and file charges in open court. In these states, including Connecticut, after a suspect has been arrested and probable cause has been established by the police, a prosecutor may file the charges by means of an "information." These states have retained the investigatory grand jury.

The Burro Herds Of Grand Canyon

The National Park Service, which is dedicated to the preservation of wild life, is drawing up plans to choot wild burros in Grand Caoyoo Netional Park and to eliminate other "exotic" animals from parks where they are damaging the environment. "Exotic" is a term zoologists use to describe animals that are not indigenous to an area but wandered in or were introduced by man.

Today'e burro berds in Grand Can-you are descended from the azimals used by mineral prospectors. According to the Park Service, the burros now number from 500 to 1,000 and compete successfully with the native desert bighorn sheep and other ani-mals for food, water and living space. They est or trample vegetation, sully water holes and otherwise "drastically" alter the ecology, the service says.

Paradoxically, the Grand Canyon burro, like many another exotic animal, proliferates more rapidly then native species because it lives far from its natural predators. As a result, the Park Service says, it "can be con-trolled only by men." This usually means shooting, although in some cases it can mean fencing in vulnerable parklands to keep out destructive Burros-2,470 in three parks-are not the only problem species. The parklands are also plagued by 1,450 horses, 700 axis and fallow deer, 1,000 goats, and scores of Russian boars and mongooses. The mongoose was deliberately introduced into Hawaii Volcanoes National Park to keep down the population of rats that had come asbore from trading ships. Unfortunately, the mongoose feasted oot only on rats bot oo rare birds.

Animal management is not new; it was written into Park Service policy in 1968, five years after a committee of zoologists and conservationists had recommended it. The service has shot goats and burros et various times in the past. What is new is the deliberate publicity that now surrounds the policy. Now the Park Service announces elimination campaigns in advance to give critics e chance to object.

Space Shots Still Go On

Space flight has, in the 19 years since the Soviet Sputnik I, become a fact of life to be taken for granted rather than a newsworthy technological wonder. The National Aeronautics and Space Administration has announced that during 1976 it launched 16 vehicles, and had no failures. None of the space shots carried a man, which may account for the scant notice paid to the events.

One reason for the "perfect" record was that all 1976 space shots employed "veteran" rockets, equipment with which space engineers now have long experience. Twelve of the sixteen shots used rockets first tested in 1960, and only one used the Titan 3-Centaur combination that first flew as late as 1974. Most of the space shots were weather or communications satellites; a few were scientific experiments.

Most 1975 space shots were also successful, including the two Vikings that landed on Mars this year. Last week, both Vikings resumed operation after a communications blackout of more than a month caused by the passage of Mars behind the sun. One radio receiver on each Viking lander has failed, but a back-up system is expect-ed to allow life-seeking experiments and Martian mapping to continue.

U.S. Moves on People Movers

One way the Department of Transportation bopes to alleviate crowded urban traffic conditions is by the installation of "people movers" to transport downtown shoppers and workers who would otherwise resort to their private cars. After receiving recommendations from the Urban Mass Transportation Administration, Secretary of Transportation William T. Coleman has selected, from eleven applicants, four cities to receive $220 millioo in Government funds to install people mover systems as demonstration projects. The four cities are Los Angeles, St. Paul, Houston and Cleve-

People movers vary in construction, but the basic concept is that of an automated system of small driverless cars, each one holding 20 to 40 people, on a guide such as an elevated monorail. The cars stop sutomatically at designated points along the line, and cars would ideally be separated by no more than 45 seconds to a minute.

Existing people movers are already in operation at the Dallas-Fort Worth and Seattle-Tacoma airports, at the Ford Fairlane plant in Dearborn, Mich., and at the University of West Virginia in Morgantown, All four have been found successful in moving people, but questions persist as to their economic suitability. .

Teaching: Back To Basics?

A three-year, $1.5 million education al study casts doubt on the value of individualized instruction, open classrooms and other innovations widely halled as spurs to achievement. The to fuel the current back-to-basics movement in education.

Studying 30,000 elementary pupils in nine states for three years, researchers compared the progress of those taught by traditional and innovative methods and found little difference as measured by scores on tests of basic

The researchers said their report "should not be viewed as a sweeping criticism" of imaginative teaching but "should serve as a reminder... that educational innovation per se will not necessarily produce dramatic effects."

Educators emphasized that the study covered average children, and said other recent research had demonstrated the value of compensatory programs for the disadvantaged.

Anthony T. He filed an amended return in 1973, listing the $45,000 as income. The guilty verdict was unanimous.

Another is Convicted Again

The second trial in New Jersey of Rubin (Hurricane) Carter and John Artis has ended with the same verdict as the first Both men were found guilty on three counts of first degree murder. Although the conviction may be appealed, many observers believed the verdict has ended the effort to free the men, who received the support of many in the black comm-nity and in the sports and entertainment fields. Mr. Carter, once a successful middleweight boxer, and Mr. Artis had served nine years of life sentences when their second trial was ordered by New Jersey's Supreme Court. The court had found that evidence beneficial to the defense had been withheld by the prosecution in the first trial in 1967. The prosecution contended in both trials that Mr. Carter and Mr. Artis, both black, entered a Paterson, N.J., bar on June 17, 1966, and killed two white men; a white woman later died from gunshot wounds; The motive was said to be revenge for the killing of a black tavern owner earlier that evening. Mr. Artis will be eligible for parole in 1980, and Mr. Carter in 1996.

Steelworker Election

New Danger to Union Democracy

One of the basic rights enjoyed by American workers is in great danger. That is the right to be represented by a union of their own choice or, if the majority so desire, to be represented by no union at all.

This most basic labor right has had a stormy history. For much of our history, when workers did join a union, hargained collectively and occasionally went on strike—the courts ruled that their union solidarity was a "conspiracy" against

When workers finally succeeded in getting laws protecting these rights, they faced another problem—the effort by many employers to infloence, dominate and control the unions of their employees. In some cases employer control was assured through the support of a separate company union, in other cases through control of the existing union, but the results were the same. This domination of unions by employers was eventually outlawed through specific provisions of law and a body of rulings of the National Labor Relations Board, as well as most state labor boards.

In the 1950s, congressional inquiries found still further obstacles to employees being represented by organizations of their own choosing that were responsive to their interests rather than to some other group. A few unions and their leaders were found to be involved in financial dealings with employers and outside interests. Some of these dealings were illegal, but even many which were legal raised serious questions as to whether these unions and their leaders acted in the interests of the nembers or of their own financial empire

Still another problem arose. Some unions did not have free, fair and demo-cratic election procedores. Even though these abuses were found only in a small part of the union movement, the Landrum-Griffin Law was enacted which tightened up the financial transactions of unions and their officials, required financial reports and mandated democratic election procedures. Thus, employees could have unions of their own and they could elect leadership which would bave to be responsive

Now there is a new threat to workers being represented by unions of their own. An election for the presidency of the 1.4 million member United Steelworkers of America will take place Feb. 8. Incumbent President I.W. Abel is not in the race because the union constitution requires mandatory retirement after age 65. The candidates for the Steelworkers presidency are Lloyd McBride, a member of the I.W. Abel-team, and Edward Sadiowski.

This is not just another union election. When the votes are all counted, there is a serious question as to whether the United Steelworkers of America will have a president who has been chosen by the workers themselves or one who has really been put in office by the money and publicity of wealthy tax-exempt foundations, Harvard professors, radical chie movie stars, anti-union employers in other indostries, leaders of the left wing of the Democratic Party, and newspapers and TV stations which have had strong anti-nnion bistories.

Reaching 1.4 million members and providing watchers at 7,000 polling places across the country (and in Canada) is a huge undertaking. A candidate who finances his campaign through contributions from union members is likely to be responsive to those members after election. But one who gets a big boost from outside sources will have to respond to others beyond the union.

So far, Sadlowski has received massive amounts of outside support,

A full one-hour TV show-shown nationwide a number of times—was financed with foundation money. Presenting only Sadlowski's side of the story, it was more like a paid ad than a documentary.

- · A major section of "60 Minutes"-again more a commercial than a news report-went into the homes of most union members through TV. This program, in the past, has featured attacks on the unemployment insurance system and other
- Harvard Professor J. K. Galhraith has sent thousands of letters to non-nnionists across the country asking for money for Sadlowski. The appeal seeks contributions for a groop called "Steelworkers Fight Back," but all three signers
- Wealthy industrialist Howard Samuels, who was opposed to unionization in his own shop, is among the employers who have made contributions to Sadiowski.
- On the West Coast, Jane Fonda organized an event to collect funds for Sadlowski, In the East, Ossie Davis did the same. Democratic party politicos Ted Sorensen and Richard Goodwin are working in the Sadlowski campaign.
- Newspapers across the country usually hostile to unions and their leaders have treated Sadlowski more favorably than almost any other union leader in

At one time it was thought that the boss was the only outsider who had an rest in trying to control the affairs of the union. Obviously that is wrong. Some outsiders want to control the election because they want the union to take their positions on foreign policy and defense. Small extremist groups have often had the same goal. Political figures want to influence the union presidency so that in the future the union will help them get their choice for the U.S. presidency. One thing is certain: not one of these outside groups really cares about the wages, hours, working conditions or job security-the basic economic interests-of the steelworkers. The outsiders have their own agendas. Recently, Murray Finley, president of the Amalgamated Clothing and Textile Workers Union, gave his personal contribution to McBride, as did members of his executive board. In a statement explaining his stand and the unique situation it represents, Finley declared: "I went in because I resented the introsion of outsiders into the labor movement. If the Reuthers, the Galbraiths and the Ted Sorensens can do it, so can the Communists, the Mafia, activists, anyone with money and an organization. That's why I went to my executive board for individual donations for McBride." Labor unions bave successfully fought off attempts to control the union by bosses, communists, corrupt and/or undemocratic union officials. In certain situations where there have been charges of corruption and even murder, the general public has a legitimate interest in rooting out the evil. But there have been no such charges about the current Steelworker leadership, which the McBride candidacy represents. In other situations, where a union is organizing unrepresented workers in an attempt to obtain elementary instice for them-as in the case of the United Farm Workers—public figures have supported such organizing efforts in the name of decency, but they have been asked to do so by the labor movement. No such issue presents itself here: the steelworkers have been well organized and ably represented. Instice in the workplace is not the issue. Yet never before has there been as much outside money, manpower and media promotion. When his all over, will the workers have a union which represents them-or will they have a leadership which uses the power of the workers to advance the interests of the outsiders who have elected it?

It May Take Time for Preventive Medicine to Recover

The Lingering Effects of The Swine-Flu Failure

By LAWRENCE K. ALTMAN

Last winter, after discovery of a new strain of influenza at Ft. Dix, N. J., United States Government officials took a bold step by deciding on a program aimed at vaccinating everyone in the nation against swine influenza. It was, aside from its health aspects, an effort to add to a series of public bealth-successes and thereby enhance the prestige, of preventive medicine..

Now the program is suspended, in all likelihood dead, and the swine flu immunization program has tarnished, rather than brightened, the reputation of public health in the minds of many

A necessary and important question arises: Will the program's failure damage the credibility of future immunization programs against influenza and other diseases, Government medical plans and even public health in gener-

Even before the swine Nu experience, the bublic shied eway from some as-. pects of preventive medicine. Immunization against polio, diphtheria, measles and other infections are reported at dangerously low levels. Preventive medicine experts contend that the success of immunizations, ironically, is partially responsible for making the public apathetic about diseases younger Americans bave never-

The polio vaccine was introduced at a time when many people were familiar with someone who had been crippled for life. Even after a production error led to paralysis among reclos, the public still came to clinics incidence fell toward zero. Polio immunizations provide life-long: protection but do not eliminate the virus; it still circulates god, from time to time, cripples the unprotected.

When smallpox existed in the country only 30 years ago, vaccination was rootine and its risks were unquestioned. Now the virus that causes smallpox is about to he eradicated from the world. The World Health Or ganization says that the disease now is confined to just one country, Some lis in East Africa. When the last case runs its course, the chain of buman-tohuman soreed will be broken, and public bealth officials say smallpox vaccinations will no longer be needed for anyone in the world.

But influence is a different matter. It can be a very serious infection. In-huenza is most dangerous to the overlung and beart disorders. Dr. J. Donald Millar, who directs the swine influenza immunization program at the Center for Disease Control in Atlanta, said on the basis of calculations made from data collected from last winter's epidemic of A/Victoria influenza that individuals in the high-risk group stood at a 1 in 2,000 chance of dying from the infection could be produced fast enough. However, after discovery of the new A/New Jersey (swine) strain, they decided otherwise. Why? Because in the interim there had been advances in influenza research and also because they wanted to demonstrate the cost benefits of preventive medicine.

When new strains started influenza epidemics in recent years, officials in Atlanta seriously considered, but rejected, the idea of mass immunization programs; they did not believe enough vaccine incorporating the new strain

The high priority on cost-benefit analyses results from the general concern with the high price of medical care; advocates of preventive medicine port for benefits of immunization programs, in addition to the prevention of auffering, as a rationale for preventive medicine. Public Health Service officials, who work under the same constraints of cost-benefit analysis. were eager to point out the potential cost effectiveness. Their argume which prevailed with the lay public officials to whom it was addressed, was that even if the epidemic of swine flu did not come, it was better to gamble with dollars than human lives.

Expected Reactions

Public health officials say they knew some adverse reactions were bound to result, even that deaths unrelated to injections would occur by coloridance on the same day a person had been vaccinated. They knew that such coo-Guillain - Barré paralytic syndrome would follow some swine flu shots, although they did not know how often. At latest count, seven deaths were attribotable to Guillain-Barré syndrome: all the victims but one had received swine flu vaccine.

Officials now coocede that in starting the nationwide program hastily, they falled to explain the risk possibilities to the public, a failure further magnified by the current climate of general skepticism about Government. At the time, there was relatively litthe public dissent from doctors, though some now say they opposed the pro-

A New Beginning: The Economy

This is the first of a series of year-end editorials, to be published daily this week through Dec. 31, examining some of the most urgent problems and issues that face the new Carter Administration and the American people w during the coming year.

The task facing the Carter Administration on the eco- by his own aim of getting back to a balanced budget by nomic front is as complex as it is critical to this nation and to the world economy.

In a sense, Mr. Carter's top priority is the same as that which faced John F. Kennedy sixteen years ago: to "get the economy moving again" in order to reduce high unemployment. But there are major differences now from the economic problems that confronted the United States in the early 1960's. For one thing, Mr. Carter must deal not only with unemployment and stagnation but with a chronic inflationary trend that is still moving at an annual rate of 5 to 6 percent. In 1961, consumer prices increased by a mere seven-tenths of 1 percent.

Tha energy crisis was unknown, or at least unrecognized, a decade ago; it has now assumed great importance in the reduction of both unemployment and inflation. For the long run, energy looms as a barrier that must be broken if further progress in living standards is to be achieved in this country and throughout the world. It is wise for Mr. Carter to elevate the energy administration's job to Cabinet rank.

The interdependence of the United States economy with the rest of the world has become markedly greater in this "post-postwar period" than it ever has been. In the postwar period after World War II, it seemed a matter of altruism for the United States to concern itself with the reconstruction of other economies and the expansion of world trade. Many American economists regarded the United States as virtually a self-sufficient economy, whose foreign trade was an almost insignificant part of its total economic performance.

Today not only has United States foreign trade grown enormously-together with American dependence on foreign energy supplies and other commodities, and foreign dependence on American food, computers and other machinery, aircraft and, unfortunately, weaponsbut this nation is far more deeply hound up with others through foreign investment and the overseas operations of multinational industries and multinational banks. Trouble abroad is trouble for American businesses at home—and for all those whose jobs and incomes depend on their stability and growth.

Stimulus vs. Inflation

Coping with this set of interlocking problems will require a broad perspective that avoids distorting shortrun priorities at the expense of long-run goals. The Carter Administration cannot simply launch stimulative programs that take no account of present or future inflationary dangers or other economic considerations.

However, since unemployment is the most pressing problem facing Mr. Carter, be should begin with measures to stimulate the overall demand for goods and services -and hence for labor, Fortunately, the economy is still ; in an uptrend, but at too slow a rate. Hence, the fiscal stimulus should be scaled to increasing the momentum. of a recovery, rather than checking and reversing a

The size of Mr. Carter's package of fiscal stimulusnow likely to be in the $20 to $25 billion range—will be constrained by the huge deficit he has inherited and also fiscal 1981. This is important for more reasons than demonstrating fiscal rectitude; increasing the nation's future saving, investment, productivity and growth, while at the same time curbing inflationary pressures, will require that the Federal budget swing from deficit to balance or preferably a surplus. For a Federal surplus is a source of national saving, when the nation is at full

Within such budget constraints it will be essential for the Carter Administration to focus its efforts on specific targets for jobs in both the public and private sectors. Indeed, it should draw heavily on the resources and growth potential of private industry as a basic solution to the unemployment problem.

This will mean not only broad fiscal and monetary stimulus but programs for improving manpower training, breaking remaining racial and other barriers to employment, and providing incentives and subsidies for companies to hire and train the unemployed. It will also mean measures to increase investment by business in new plant and equipment as a means of raising productivity, and at the same time creating more jobs.

Restoration of Trust

Gaining the confidence of business clearly plays a key role in Mr. Carter's thinking, he probably has gone. further than any Democratic President before him in that direction at the start of an Administration. But business has a task of its own in winning back the confidence of the American public. To do so, it will need to prove that it can measure up to social as well as corporate responsibilities. It can do so by taking a positive attitude toward cooperation with the Federal Government to reduce both unemployment and inflation.

Beyond that, business needs to regain public trust. and respect for its honesty and integrity after the far too numerous examples of corrupt corporate and government behavior, both at home and abroad. But publiccynicism about business is matched by the low esteem in which politicians are held today. Mr. Carter's joba fundamental theme in his campaign-will be to restore respect for Government. This, crucial in its own right, is also linked to the quest for a healthy economy. A democratic society, with a 'mixed economy, cannot !. work effectively without an honest relationship between government and business-and between government and

Mr. Carter cannot be expected to clean up the vast, interlocking set of economic and social problems he faces in a magnificent "hundred days," or even in the next four years. The problems of this highly industrialized society, including unemployment, inflation, energy and world economic development, are likely to remain on the agenda for the rest of the century.

But the way Mr. Carter moves in the period immediately ahead can establish a new direction for economic policy that he and future Presidents can build on for decades to come. That long-range perspective is what has been most lacking in American policy.

Ends and Means

Does the end justify the means, or are there means that are unjustifiable no matter how important, and good an objective may be? This philosophic question is as old as man, but it arises constantly in new situations. Two developments concerning Africa these past few days illustrate its poignancy.

In Rhodesia there was a massacre with machine guns and bayonets-of 27 black workers on a tea plantation, slaughtered in front of their wives and children. The murderers were black guertillas. The workers involved had refused to obey guerrilla orders to quit working for white owners. Their execution will terrorize other blacks in similar situations. It will make it easier for the guerrillas to win cooperation and submission from rural blacks in that part of Rhodesia. The guerrillas may well have decided that this exhibition of their power was a cheap way to advance their cause.

But what has such action and reasoning to do with basic concepts of morality, and what can one expect of a future black-ruled Rhodesia if those heading it show a similar contempt for the lives of fellow blacks? How, can sympathizers with majority rule in Rhodesia complacently accept massacres such as this as part of the necessary price for winning black power?

At the United Nations last week, the General Assembly for the first time endorsed "armed struggle" to permit South-West Africa (Namibia) to gain independence from South Africa. The General Assembly majority explicitly held that independence for this area is of such overriding importance that it is worth destroying forever the image of the United Nations as the international organization devoted to peace and to the settlement of disputes through negotiation.

A precedent has now been set that will return to haunt the transformed and cheapened United Nations, Perhaps some future General Assembly will vote to endorse "armed struggle" to bring freedom to Kazakhstan or Tibet or Croatia or Kashmir. The means having been approved, the end depends only on the political balance in the General Assembly. It is not an inspiring thought.

Curbing Medicaid Costs

Governor Carey's proposals for eliminating Medicaid reimbursement for specialized services such as privateduty nursing, physical therapy and podiatry are only the beginning of an agonizing effort to lower Medicaid and welfare costs to levels the state and its localities

Similar proposals for Medicaid cuts were quashed last year after intensive lobbying by community groups and affected health practitioners. Their pleas on behalf of New Yorkers in distress are not without merit and are in the best tradition of what has always been a compas-

This year, however, the State Legislature must face up to the harsh reality that in attempting to respond generously to the needs of the indigent, New York has exceeded its capacity to pay. If Medicaid and welfare costs are allowed to continue to grow as they have in recent years, the state and many local communities—all of which share in such costs—could be driven into bank-

Like it or not, soaring Medicaid and welfare costs must be curbed. The only question is where and how.

Although any cuts will be painful to those directly affected, the Carey proposal so far, including a plan to lower the maximum allowable rent for welfare recipients, appears thoughtfully designed to do the least human damage. Many of the medical services for which reimbursement is granted here are not covered in other states. In fact, only New York and Minnesota of all the states and territories now offer all 17 Medicaid options allowed under current Federal law.

New Yorkers have no reason to be ashamed of this evidence of their concern for human suffering. But the fiscal realities of persistent budget deficits and a declining economy cannot be ignored. It is far better to trim Medicaid and welfare spending selectively at the fringes, as the Governor is proposing, than to be forced into making the across-the-board cuts that some Republicans are suggesting and which could become the only alternative.

Price Increases for Steel and Oil

The contrast in political and media comments: generally condemning the steel industry's recent 6 percent price increase and generally peasing the 5 percent price increase in oil by Saudi Arabia and the Emirates leads to certain escapable conclusions.

1. Between 6 percent and 5 percent, there must be a world of difference... or at least half a world.

2. It is praiseworthy to start at 15 percent and go down to 5 percentwhile it is foolhardy to go directly to 6 percent without starting out with a higher "straw man" number.

3. Arabian potentates are entitled to price increases while American corporations are not.

4. If the price increase goes out of the country, that's good news; but, if the price increase stays inside the country and is used for capital goods, dividends to shareholders, and/or Federal or local taxes, that's bad

5. Steel creates inflation and oil

6. A 5 perceot increase by a monopoly or cartel is praiseworthy while 6 percent increase in a competitive industry should be criticized.

SHELDON B, GUREN Cleveland, Dec. 20, 1976

Saudi Arabia's oil minister, Mr. Yamani, argued for a freeze in the, price of oil, at least for the next six months, in his address at the latest meeting of the OPEC nations on the grounds such an increase in the price of oil at this time might abort the economic recovery of the U.S. and Western Europe from one of the severest recessions since the 1930's. But, nowhere would the hardship be more pronounced due to an increase in the price of oil at this time than in the oil importing poor countries such as India, Pakistan and Bangladesh. Already, some of these countries are: forced to spend more than half of their total export earnings for the oil imports as a result of quadrupling the price of oil since 1973. Financial aid to these poor nations by the OPEC nations, either in the form of direct. grants-in-aid or soft loans, to pay for their oil imports bas been quite

'Flag of Convenience'

It should be noted that the two oil tankers involved for the most recentmarine disasters, in Los Angeles harbor and off Nantucket Island, were both under Liberian registry, the mostubiquitous "flag of convenience" emaveda by shipowners for various reasons wages, taxes, etc.—not the least of which are the lower standards of marine inspection and seamanship permitted by the Liberian Government.

Most mishaps at sea are caused by human error, a modern steamship being all but invulnerable to natural elements. The Titanic, for example, was proclaimed unsinkable and might well have proven its claim but for a negligent captain.

The U.S. Coast Guard, which licenses American merchant captains and officers, exacts the most stringent requirements of any nation in the world, the results of which are in evidence in the manner in which American ships are commanded. This is not to say that U.S. vessels are never involved in marine disasters, but their record for avoiding such disasters is unequaled hy any other maritime nation. [Edi-

Environmental Farce To the Editor:

I was interested in Gladwin Hill's Week in Review article of Dec. 5 statements as required by the National Environmental Policy Act (NEPA) for federally funded projects that "significantly affect the human environment.". A highway project in our area is at good illustration of some of the shortcomings of the required statements. A Thruway connector link is planned to be built across a beautiful and geolog-... ically unique island formed by the Mohawk River and the Barge Canal at Little Falls, called Moss Island. Environmentalists exerted pressure on the Federal Highway Administration to require an environmental impact statement; which was duly prepared by the local office of the Department. of Transportation. (In response to criticism that, in addition to the island's being damaged, an original Eric Canal lock would be buried under tons of fill.

reach of many small farmers in the poor countries, a move that could put a halt to continuous expansion of food production in a region that suffers from malnutrition. Talk of economic justice by some of the oil producing nations every time an increase in the price of oil is in the offing, when weighed against the plight of the oilimporting poor countries as a result of such a move, sounds more like a cynical ploy on the part of the OPEC nations to get their beligful of the world's hard currency.

VEDULA N. MURTI Middletown, Pa., Dec. 17, 1976

To the Editor: Perhaps it was the holiday spirit that prompted President Ford and President-elect Carter to respond with such unseemly gratitude to Saudi Arabia's 5 percent oil price hike. The imposition by a cartel of an incremental cost of several billion dollars on a marketplace whose fundamentals call for no such increase, would hardly appear to warrant our effusive thanks. While all sorts of profound political implications are being read into this latest Saudi act, highway robbery remains highway robbery, and one may wonder whether some months from now we may oot look back with chagrin upon our leadership's latest act of graceless surrender to the cartel.

A Better Federal Service To the Editor:

- A long overdue rectification of inequities in salaries of ranking Federal officials might be more palatable to the public if, in addition to having linked increased pay with improved ethics, the Presidential Commission oo Executive, Legislative and Judicial Salaries had also addressed a third question particularly pertinent to the permanent service. This is, how to get rid of the deadwood. ...

Unfortunately, the present pay, not to mention increases, together with the strengthened grievance and anti-discriminatinn procedures in effect in the Federal agencies, encourages and enables those officials who are least effective to hang on, frustrating improvements, adversely affecting morale and consuming the time and energies of their superiors. Until the question of "selection-out" is dealt with forthrightly, some skepticism must remain that increased pay necessarily will result in a better Federal service;

IGTON. Dec. 25 - Jimmy shinet has been given what nyon used to call sort of a hello" in this part of the le ere told he's going into is with his second or third that they are a collection. mt retreads who are about as an open grave. Herewith

Carter won the election narrow margin, which redoubts of a nation that need of change but was zious about changing to a ely unfamiliar candidate. Wr. Carter's first problem: ptured the Presidency but on the confidence of the even of many of those cused of disappointing his selecting a team of dim but eff ient mechanics: not Eisenhower's nine millionaires and a plumber, but nine plumbers and a millionaire.

There is, of course, something in this charge, but not much, at least not yet. It is true that he promised more "newcomers" than he picked, and picked a lot of experienced Washington types he denounced in the campaign, but if he had drafted a Cabinet that satisfied the labor and black condituencles that undoubtedly belied him win the Presidency, this would not have been a very merry Christmas in

The people are still wondering where we are going in the last years of the Seventies. We have almost eight million unemployed, and when the Christmas bills come in, nebody is likely to think inflation has been licked. In short, it is rather odd that Mr. Carter should be condemned for picking a Cabinet of efficiency experts

WASHINGTON

Maybe the country needs a collection of brilliant young innovators, with a different vision of the Coming Ageyou could make a good argument for is—but Mr. Carter's critics have not come up with so many new, brilliant draft-choices, and the country is obviously looking at the moment for reassurence more than anything eise. ..

. Therefore, the question is not whether this is the ideal Cabinet, but compared to what? Given Mr. Carter's problem of having to govern the whole country rather than pay off his excessive promises, he has kept a fairly good balance.

Compared to the Ford White House staff and Cabinet—forgetting Mr. Nixon for Christmas -Mr. Carter's choices to head most of the major departments compare favorably with their predecessors, and the men who will be with

Oval Office-Jody Powell, Hamilton Jordan, Stuart Eizenstati, Jack ; Watson, etc., are not the sort you'di hand your hat to by mistake, and may indeed be the best assistant coaches around here since Roosevelt came to

There is another point about this Cabinet that may be important. Mr. Carter seems to have the original idea that they should be judged, not merely as individuals, but collectively as an executive committee or council of Presidential advisers that will work together to get this Federal bureaucracy under control.

Mr. Carter has paid some attention to fundamentals, to blocking and tackling this problem, which is a hard, dreary and often vicious business, not usually done by spectacular

pointments to make, and he still has time to put a little shine and poetry into this new collection of rather dim and solemn efficiency computers. He needs some speech-writers, who have sense of humor and a sense of history, to help him reduce all the diversity and complexity of our time to some kind of identity the people can understand.

His people are running around here asking for suggestions, so here goes: for Ambassedor to the Court of St. James's: Alistair Cooke. After all, Cooke has been the unpaid United States Ambassador to Britain, and vice versa, for almost 25 years, and must be one of the most informed and articulate Americans on the scene

For Mistress of the National Arts. or for that matter, almost anything elset Beverly Sills, the Brooklyn thrush, one of the wisest and wittiest women in the world today. For head of the United States Information Agency and the Voice of America: Bill Moyers of Texas, who is only one of many stars in the arts of communication, which Carter's team seems to

The talent that is available is obviously greater than the talent aiready chosen, but enough! So far, the main thing has been done: More people have been satisfied by Mr. Carter's choices than have been disappointed, and if this is wrong, he can always fire them later.

Meanwhile, the Carter team, or so seems here, deserves a better press then it has received, and at least a chance to prove its worth.

The machinery of the Government here is a little creaky, but not all that bad. As Bert Lance told the editors of The Washington Post the other day, nobody's going to tear the machine apart. "If it's not broke, why fix #?"

their heads is constitutional. Louisiana has some special problems. For one thing, its electric chair doesn't work enymore, not having been used since 1961 - although it electrocated 133 persons from 1930 to 1961-and the Texan the state used to hire to pull the switch, at $300 per execution, died several years ago.

The State Supreme Court, moreover, is insisting that the men and women reprieved when the old Louisiana death penalty law was struckdown last summer be given the most severe atternative sentence available -life imprisonment for murder, for example. The reprieved persons and their lawyers are arguing that the Legislature had provided no "alternative" to a mandatory death penaltywhich is why the law was declared unconstitutional—and that therefore new trials must be held for all those reprieved in July.

. In all the Southern states, however and as enthusiastic as legislators and the public may seem for death penalty laws, a strong undercurrent of opposition is flowing. The Southern Coalition on Jails and Prisons with a chapter in every Southern state, is a major instrument of that opposition. There may be some executions soon but they won't take place in the dark as in its Christmas Eve vigils, the coalition plans to keep right on raising what its director, the Rev. Joseph B. ### A Tale of Two Presidents

PARIS—French President Giscard d'Estang has just written United States President-elect Carter strongly endorsing the idea of a Western summit meeting of chiefs of government and suggesting that, under the rotation system of such conferences, the next should be held in Europe and as soon as can conveniently be arranged following the American inauguration. To assist in coordination of advance planning and also as a personal courtesy the French President also wrote President Ford informing him of the contents of his letter to Mr. Carter. The latter is actually the second exchange with the President-elect. The first was a congratulatory message after the Democratic victory and a polite acknowledgement from the win-

Apart from this projected summit, already endorsed by the principal in-dustrialized countries but whose site and date have not yet been set, nothing is foreseen here concerning a bilateral meeting between the French President and either Mr. Carter or Cyrus Vance, his designated Secretary of State. Nevertheless, it is hopedgiven existing world economic conditions, the change of administration in Washington and other current problenis—that exchanges of views at the top will be encouraged as soon as

Essentially, relations between the United States and France are good, and it is confidently assumed they will continue so. If anything, there has been improved mutual understanding on the subject of nuclear nonproliferation although President Gescard d'Estaing seems to feel this topic has been seriously misunderstood or misrepresented in the media.

For him it is not at all-and never crises.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

By C. L. Sulzberger

was a bilateral matter but one concerning all nations engaged in either military or peaceful atomic manufacture: the U.S.A. and France, indeed; but also the Soviet Union, West

Germany, etc. Full agreement does not yet exist, but, although some aspects remain at issue, this year has seen increasing parallelism between the views of Washington and Paris. There had been a special difference over France's project to sell a reprocessing plant to Pakistan as part of an overall nuclear deal. That project seems to be fading

This, like West Germany's similar proposed sale of such a plant to Brazil, is only an aspect of the general and increasingly dangerous risk of proliferation, and the whole question of how the cycle of re-treating nuclear waste or used reactor cores is what is truly France in no way wishes to abet proliferation; but it does want to insure that its own technology is on a fully equal basis with those of other manufacturers in permitted world markets, Mr. Giscard d'Estaing appears to feel recent modifications in French policy have achieved that aim.

Early in 1976 there was a certain difference in the approach of France and the United States to African affairs. Paris felt Washington was more or less paralyzed in approaching that area. But since then Secretary of State Kissinger started his southern African initiative, seeking a peaceful settle-ment of the Rhodesian and Namibian

The second aspect of Africa's problem is that it is a poor continent, receiving substantial arms shipments from the Soviet bloc although its economy is in great difficulty. Mr. Giscard d'Estaing intends to tell Mr. Carter the first time they meet that there must be concerted Western action on this dangerous situation.

As for U.S. European policy, France doesn't favor any new American initiatives with respect to the European Community. Europe itself must settle its own problems, Meanwhile Paris hopes to proceed with direct elections of Community Assembly representa-

The only serious bilateral irritant to Franco-American relationships could develop over the supersonic Concorde ircraft, now permitted to fly only to Washington. If the plane is not eventually allowed to land at New York-or, even worse, if there is a move to ban it totally-there would be keen resentment by French public opinion and a suspicion that the United States was seeking to inhibit

French technological competition. President Giscard d'Estaing appears to recognize the need to maintain global strategic equilibrium, but he cautioned against premature assumptions that the Soviet bloc has achieved military superiority over the West. For him it is wise to remember the weak economic base on which the Communist arms pile is built. One should avoid too hasty a judgment minimizing the West's own strength; nevertheless, France has increased its military contribution to the North Atlantic Alliance. However, it sees no need for revision of the existing NATO setup, despite the fact that French forces are kept outside the allied peacetime command structure.

The mails are gone now, paved over into parking lots, in the name of progress. Gone is the hakery where their mother worked 12 hours a day; Ann Brown was widowed young and she remained unmarried until her two sons were grown and able to support themselves. Gone, too, are her sons. In their world, the world of professionat-baskethalf coaching there is never much time for rention. The schedule, is dictatorial. It seems there is always an airplane to catch.

That morning Herb will awaken in Southfield, Mich. and drive to the airport for his flight; it is a game day for him siso. On the plane he will talk basketball and play gm. And perhaps, when he gets settled in his hotel room. after the flight, he will place a call to Larry, because they will see each other that night.

The schedule has given them a few hours together.

76ers Down Knicks On McGinnis Shot

A 15-foot jump shot by George Mo-Ginnis with one second to play enabled the Philadelphia 76ers to best the Knicks, 105-104, last night in a National Basketball Association game at a packed Madison Square Garden.

McGinnis, who scored 20 points in the game, 10 in the first quarter and 10 in the last, took a pass from Henry Bibby to the left of the foul line after the 76ers gained possession with six seconds left when Julius Erving deflected an Earl Monroe pass.

The Knicks, who never led until 35 seconds from the end, went up by 104-102 after Bob McAdoo missed a long jumper, save the rebound took the ball into the corner and just as he was about to shoot, flipped a hard pass Spencer Haywood, who hit on a

Erving had a chance to tie the game with 32 seconds left after he was fonled by Lonnie Shelton but the former New York Net star made only the first of two free throws, cutting the deficit to-a point and setting the stage for a Knick turnover and McGinris's basket. McGinnis scored 10 of Philadelphia's last 13 points. Lloyd Free led the 76ers with a career high 30 points. The Knicks began their comeback after trailing by 12 points. Walt Frazier started them on a run of 10 straight points and Monroe kept it going until New York tied things at 100-100 with 2:29 to play. Monroe wound up with 22 points, McAdoo had 24.

Erving scored 16, all in the second half, and Steve Mix added 19 points for the 76ers. Erving, who helped draw the season's third capacity crowd of 19,694, played only 41/2 minutes in the first half. In his first New York appearance as an N.B.A. player, Erving picked up three early fouls and sat out the remainder of the first half as the 76ers built a 58-48 advantage at intermission.

The first half was plagued by fouls. The teams went to the free-throw line for 39 shots, 21 for Philadelphia, which made 16. The Knicks were 14 for 18. Mix Fills In Well

Erving was replaced by Mix with Philadelphia ahead, 18-9, and the 76ers proceeded to move to a 33-19 firstquarter advantage. Some of that edge came during a 10-2 burst after Erving left as Mix bit two of his first three

The 76ers took charge from the opening buzzer, going up by 9-0 be-fore Earl Monroe hit on a short jumper after 3 mimutes 3 seconds.

The biggest problems for New York were Henry Bibby and Free, the 76er guards. They generated points on the fast break as Bibby hit for 8 first-quarter points on medium-range jumpers and Free penetrated and drew frequent fouls. Free had 22 points at halftime, 8 in the first quarter. He made 7 of his 13 shots from the field and 8 of the 10 from the free-throw line.

The Knicks, after missing their first six shots, three by McAdoo, made only six baskets in 24 attempts in the first

At the start of the second quarter, Gene Shue, the 76er coach, and Red Holzman, the Knick coach, substituted freely. For a time both lineups resembled those in training camp. The Continued on Page 3, Column 4

Steelers Face Raiders; Vikings and Rams Clash

Minnesota Is Favorite

By MICHAEL KATZ

The Minnesota Vikings play the Los Angeles Rams today and the winner goes to the Super Bowl and Ahmad Rashad says "this is what you play football for," and that is why he laughed at O.J. Simpson for 10 minutes. Rashad appreciates better than most of the 85 other players who will be wearing thermal underwear at Bloomington, Minn., today the importance of the National Football Conference championship game. They all know about the money, the fame. Rashad is the only player in the game, however, who started the season with a questionable knee and playing on an expansion team.

The Viking wide receiver is now one of the main reasons Minnesota is a 5-point favorite over a team that played it to a 10-10 tie earlier in the season at Bloomington. The rematch will be shown in the New York area by CBS-TV at I P.M.

Poor O.J.' Cited Rashad was a No. I draft choice for the St. Louis Cardinals in 1972, but was unhappy there with both the team and the city. He asked to be traded and was sent to Buffalo in 1974, where he roomed with Simpson.

"O.J. and I used to talk about it all the time." Rashad said by phone, "about what football is all about, about being on the best team.

"Poor O.J. He's done everything as an individual, but it doesn't look like Continued on Page 4, Column 6.

Rough Game Expected

By WILLIAM N. WALLACE Special to The New York Times

OAKLAND, Calif., Dec. 25-At the American Football Conference championship game bere tomorrow in the Oakland - Alameda County Coliseum there will be three competing team the Raiders, the Pittsburgh Steelers and the Rozelle Rockets. The last named will be the team of six officials, with two reserves available, and its goal is not . to win the game but to make sure neither of the other two maim one another in reaching a decision. The nation will see the game over television with Channel 4, the outlet in New York, starting at 4 P.M.

The game promises to be extremely rough between two antagooistic teams that sometimes play on the borderlines of the rules. Oakland led the league again in the season just past in penalties and the Pittsburgh bully boys were not far behind.

The background is that the Raiders beat the Steelers, 31-28, in the opening game of the season and George Atkinson, the Oakland cornerback, slammed Lynn Swann, the Steeler receiver, to the deck so hard with a smasb to the back of the head that Swann came out with a concussion.

Atkinson drew a $1,500 fine from Pete Rozelle, the league commissioner, and Chuck Noll, the Pittsburgh coach, mentioned something about a "criminal element" in football.

The many penalties meted out, to Czechoslovakia in particular, by the Finnish referee sent the Czechoslovaks into a rage at the final buzzer, "The referee wasn't Finnish, he was Russian," said Jiri Novak, who scored one of Czechoslovakia's goals. "We are a small country and we must not win here," he said, attributing the game's character to political factors.

Turning the Tables: The Athlete as Recruiter

By JOSEPH A. MARGOLIS

Success and recognition for a college athlete may be brief, so after his playing days he should be prepared for a career. Will be be prepared? In many cases, no. In the pursuit of victory, the athlete's educational development is often neglected.

Often, the college athlete is exploited by coaches and the educational systems responsible for his development as a well-rounded human being. Some coaches are interested mainly in building impressive won-lost records to keep their jobs because big-time college administrators and their alumni will not tolerate a loser.

Tha athlete may be vulnerable to the high-pressure salesmanship of recruit-ers. And during this confusing period it is often difficult for him to realize the long-range implications of a solid academic background, As colleges pursue him with scholarship offers, he may think more about think think more about athletic programs than academic programs.

Perhaps the athlete's liberal educa-

As I ponder that famous question, "What shall I wear?" I know I have a problem. Of course, I first checked out my closet-backless tennis dresses, too cold and no tan; terry jumpunit and matching jacket, too casual. So I sit here with my fabric, scissors, thread and sewing machine trying desperately to outdo a lovely creation by Geoffrey Beene, Ralph Lauren, Oleg Cassini, etc. Should it be white, pastel, or a vivid color, short-short, knee-length, mid-calf or ankle-length; have a high and coaches with educational informatioo. For example, is the college a bona fide institution of higher education?

Can we really accomplish this? Hopefully, yes, Would coaches and athletes really want this? I am not sure. To belp the athlete make an objec-

Ao academic rating for each mejor field of study should be provided to show the strengths and weaknesses of each major program, That would counter the stock answer of the recruiter who asks the athlete what he wants to study and then says, "Our school has the best department in that field." Something to Go Orl

Schools should be required to provide each prospective recruit with a list covering the last 15 or 20 years, of all athletes, by sport, and their major tion, even after six or seven years of schooling? Delayed graduation or graduation in a new major should be listed. This will show whether athletic , participation will be so demanding that the recruit cannot meet academic requirements in a normal amount of time. or in a specific area of study. It will also help to determine if administrators and coaches see that cormal progress toward a degree is being made.

The prospective recruit should have a list, by sport, of how many athletes in each major field pursued graduate degrees. This will tell if undergraduate training will stimulate bim to continue fields of study. For example, in the his education, and if his undergraduate education will prepare him for acceptance to graduate school.

There should be a list of the number of the scholarship athletes, by sport, who did not spend four years on the team. Each case should show why the athlete stopped competing. Were the demands taking all of their time? Were athletes disappointed with the coaches? Did athletes fail to have their scholarships renewed, and if so, why?

If the college sport has a professional counterpart, what percentage of its athletes made the professional ranks? Who were they?

This will give the athlete a realistic idea of his chances to become a pro. Many college athletes, particularly those from ghetto areas, have a false notion that the percentage of college. players entering the professional ranks is high, when in fact is it extremely low. Many athletes leave college without a degree and face bleak futures.

Using computers, this information could be quickly and readily assembled. The appropriate athletic governing bodies should then require every col-lege to forward this information to its prospective athletes and their parents

When athletes learn to use this information prudently and college coaches and administrators keep in perspective the primary purpose of college for an athlete more student-athletes will experience more successful futures.

Mediocrity Rewarded With Lopsided Salaries

To the Sports Editor:

Imagine the consternation of people overwrought by the lopsided salaries of today's sports figures. Unreal, they say. Way out of line, they say. Well, examine the obvious. In our daily newspapers how often are student achievements in science. art, math or dance, for example, ever recorded? Student growth is instead sectioned off in enormous proportions in the sports pages. Here, the poorest starting basketball players on high school teams find their names and points scored after each confrontation. Why are we the public so confused when in today's society millionaire athletes are playing uninspiringly on los-ing pro teatus? Early warnings of these misplaced priorities are growing all the time in public education.

Isn't it incredible how easy it is for mediocrity to perpetuate itself? PETER HERTLING

"He's a legitimate back He's not a kid you just heard about who made a lot of yards at a small school."

- Given 2 Opportunities

Herrera considers himself lucky: There was a sandlot team called the Pelham Spartans, where he followed through on some of his early sports instincts, and a school, Westchester Community College; that was willing to gamble on someone with no organ-ized football experience.

"It was a blow having to work after school," Andre said, neither ashamed nor embittered by the experience, which resulted after his parents were divorced. "Sports was my life. But working taught me about acquiring things on my own, about working hard, about not being able to get everything you want when you want it."

Herrers has had some time for reflection this week, renewing ties at home with his mother, sister, two brothers and friends. He still hopes to receive an invitation to a postsesson all-star game, but realizes the name of the "It was a blow having to work after

"Andrew's siways been a determined person," said Mrs. Clotilde Herrera, who got to see her son play football for the first time when Southern Illinois teammates chipped in and flew her and Andre's 13-year-old brother, Louis, to a game this fall.

"Andre never got cocky with all the attention he got," said Dempsey, a former assistant with the Detroit Lions, who turned around the school's wonlost fortunes (from 2-9 to 7-4) in his first season. He led by doing and the players respected him for this."

Change of Maturity

Dempsey believes the 6-foot, 200pound Herrera became "physically tough" as a result of a serious summer cooditioning program and the realization that he could succeed in pro foot-ball. Mentally, Herrera caye he now sees things clearer, has better judgment and "picks people out better" than the quick-tempered warehouse worker who often regretted spontaneous outbursts. Bis Potential Assessed

Part of the change in Herrera is maturity, the dividends of being away from home, living in his own epartment and adjusting to a new social experience. Then there is the intuitive sense of confidence that comes from listening to music by a Stanley Clark or Billy Cobham before a game and visualizing yourself invincible.

Herrera says he plays music in his mind. He also feels "I don't have to take a second seat to anybody" as a pro prospect.

Soviet Skater Betters Record for 1,500 Meters

MOSCOW, Dec. 25, (AP)—Vladimir Lobanov of the Soviet Union bettered the world speed-skating record in the 1,500 meters today at an All-Union National meet, according to Tass, the official Soviet press agency but the record will not count because the meet was not internationally recognized.

Tass said Lobanov covered the distance in 1 minute, 53.8 seconds at the Medeo Rink in Ahna Ata, Kazakhstan. The official world mark is 1:55.61, set last spring by Hans van Helden of the Netherlands.

Vanessa With Two Heads

That orphan of the holidays, the New York horseplayer, has been at loose ends since Thursday, rudderless, drifting, with no place to go except bome to the loved ones. The New York Racing Association feels that after 298 days that offered 2,754 invitations to bankruptcy the clientele needs a few days off to hock Christmas gifts for fresh money. Accordingly, Aqueduct shat down of following Thurs-day's ninth race, The Times and its gracious amenities will not be available ogain until first post on Monday, Jan. 3. From then on, fatted calf will be on the menu in the Man O' War Room until further notice.

To e player stuck with his money, it is small comfort to be told that the stakes schedule for 1977 provides for the distribution of $7,495,000 in added money. However, his imagina-tion might be stirred by the discovery

tion might be stirred by the discovery that six Saturdays will be brightened by doubleheaders that could provide something special in entertainment. In spite of declining attendance, a dwindling business at the betting wickets and e precarious fiscal position that is further jeopardized by the threat of competition from Meadowlands in New Jersey, New York still has the finest racing in America, with more and better stakes than any other gambling joint. Now management is coupling come of the most attractive stakes on the same program on the theory that this will double the fun and the box-office appeal. Back in the Great Depression when

Back in the Great Depression when business was falling off, movie theaters struck on a similar remedy, discarding the newsreels and short subjects that bad been padding the program and presenting instead two feature films for the price of one. Long before that, of course, the bargain doubleheader had been estab-lished practice in baseball, and when Ned Irish moved college basketball from the campus gym to Madison Square Garden all his shows were doubleheaders. This afternoon television will show not one pro football

champiouship, but two. Embarrassment of Riches

Joe Pakner wrote that the basketball doubleheader "reminds me of a lady who, after laughing immoderate-ly at a joke, said, That's a wonderful story. Tell it again," But Joe, God rest him, was a curmudgeon. Who is to say that Vanessa Redgrave with two heads wouldn't be twice as love-ly as she is now?

Anyway, the first double-dip serving of racing is scheduled for June 11 with the Mother Goose Stakes as co-feature supporting the Belmont Stakes. Here is an embarrassment of riches, for the 110-year-old Belmont, "the test of the champion," may be America's greatest race, and the Mother Goose, at a mile and an eighth, is the middle event in the triple crown for fillies, which starts with the Acorn, at a mile, and con-cludes with the mile-and-a-half Coaching Club American Oaks.

If there had been such a pairing on the 1976 schedule, the unforgettable spectacle of Angel Cordero hold-ing the gimpy, gallant miler Bold Forbes together for a mile and a half would have been enriched by a poign-antly exciting Mother Goose. That was the race where the persistent rivals Optimistie Gal and Dearly Precious destroyed each other going six furlangs in 1:08 4-5, whereupon Girl in Love came on to win by a length and a half, and broke a cannon bone

The other doubleheaders coming up way, but it doesn't hurt to try.

Forego Thrilling Marlboro Cup triumph

will couple the Jerome Handicap and Astarita Stakes, the Woodward Stakes and Lawrence Realization, the Mariboro Cup and Frizette Stakes, the Jockey Club Gold Cup and Champagne Stakes and, finally, on Nov. 19, a new event, the $200,000 Turf Classic, and the Demoiselle for 2year-old fillies. The Turf Classic is weight-for-age at a mile and a half On grass.

Painting the Lily

After Forego's performance in the Mariboro Cup this year, only a con-genital lily-painter far gone in sin would suggest that this stakes needed o supporting feature, for the Mariboro was chosen race of the year by acclamation, and some felt it was New York's best since Secretariat's Belmont. It will be a long time before witnesses can forget the chilling finish, with the huge gelding splashing through slop on the far ontside and getting up to beat Honest Pleasure in the last stride.

Loaded with 137 pounds, giving 18 pounds to Honest Pleasure and from 22 to 28 to the others, Forego raced so wide he probably traveled 90 feet farther than the mile and a quarter assigned. At one point he had seven horses ahead of him and only two behind. In the homestretch he was fifth, and be didn't get up a full head of steam until the last 16th.

As the Marlboro Cup extended Forego's reign as horse of the year through a third season, so the Frizette smoothed the way for Sensational's way to the 2-year-old filly championship. This event, run two days after the Marlboro, was New York's richest stakes for fillies. It was expected to be a two-horse match between Mrs. Warren and Northern Sea, but Sensational, already a double stakes winner, charged up in the last 16th to whip them both. That was the last race of the year for Mrs. Warren, but Sensational, a daughter of the brilliant Hoist the Flag, came back in the Selima to beat Northern Sea again.

As Ed Bowen pointed out in The Blood-Horse, running two stakes on the same day used to be common practice in New York, and it made for some memorable happenings. For example, the day Nashua packed it in with a victory in the 1956 Jockey Club Gold Cup, a new champion named Bold Ruler swept home in the Futurity, and when Secretariat won the Mariboro, Desert Vixen con-firmed her championship in the Bel-dame. It won't always work that

The Raider cornerback, repected as a good player, did not mend his ways and in last Saturday's division playoff game against New England he was penalized for slugging Russ Francis, the Patriot tight end, in the face with his forearm.

He is marked as a bad guy, and in the feisty atmosphere in which this game will be played any little incident, such as a shove or a push by Atkinson, will start the conflagration. That is why the Rozelle Rockets are an all-star aggregation of N.F.L. officials.

The inclination to slug it out may be as strong as the will to win the conference championship and qualify for the Super Bowl at Passdena, Calif., on Jan. 9. Furthermore, the Raiders believe they have something to prove against the Steelers, to whom they lost the A.F.C. championship, 16-10, a year ago and also in 1974, 24-13. The year before that the Raiders lost another A.F.C. title game, that time to Miami, and also others to Baltimore in 1970, to Kansas City in 1969, and to the Jets

The N.F.L. has endured an awful lot of criticism from all sides over some mysterious officiating in last weekend's division playoff games, especially re-garding the rough conduct of the Raid-ers against the Patriots.

So Art McNally, Rozelle's supervisor of officials, has trotted out his first team for tomorrow's game here, men who were inactive last weekend.

The referee will be Tommy Bell, who in other vocational hours is an attorney in Lexington, Ky. This is his 15th sea-soo in the N.F.L. as a whistle blower, and no one fools with Bell. He knows his rules and procedures and he makes quick, sound decisions. The fact that he once worked for Happy Chandler, the former Goveror and Senator from the Blue Grass State, when Chandler was commissioner of the Continental Football League is not to be held against him.

Bell articulates so well, with a Ken-

The umpire, Al Conway, is in his 11th N.F.L. season. He is an assistant vice president of a chemical company in Kansas City and he played football at Army, before leaving West Point in the 1951 cribbing scandal and at Wil-liam Jewell College where he was a Little All-America end.

Writers Vote Seven Players All-Pro for a Third Time

Seven of the 24 players selected to its annual All-Pro National Football League squad by the Professional Football Writers of America gained the bonor for the third time. The balloting sponsored by Schick, was done by 350 sportswriters who cover N.F.L. games. Those named for the third time were Ron Yary, Jim Langer, O. J. Simp-son, Jack Youngblood, Jack Ham, Ken son, Jack Youngblood, Jack Ham, Ken Houston and Ray Guy.

The American and National Conferences placed 12 players apiece. On a team basis, the Oakland Raiders and the Buffalo Bills each had two players on the offensive unit while the Pittsburgh Steelers and the Los Angeles Rams led the defensive team with two selections each.

The offensive team was made up of Bert Jones of Baltimore at quarterback, Simpson of Buffalo and Walter Payton of Chicago at running backs, Dave Casper of Oakland at tight end, Clifford Branch of Oakland and Drew Pearson of Dallas at wide receivers, Yary of Minnesota and Dan Dierdorf of St. Louis at tackles, Joe DeLamielleure of Buffalo and John Hannah of New Eng-land at guards, Langer of Miami at center and Jim Bakken of St. Louis at place-kicker

Named to the defensive team were Youngblood of Los Angeles and Tommy Hart of San Francisco at ends, Wally Chambers of Chicago and Jerry Sherk of Cleveland at tackles, Jack Lambert of Pittsburgh at middle linebacker, Ham of Pittsburgh and Robert Brazile of Honston at outside linebackers, Monte Jackson of Los Angeles and Roger Wehrli of St. Louis at cornerbacks. Cliff Harris of Dallas and Houston of Washington at safeties and Ray Guy of Oakland at punter.

The P.F.W.A. selection of most valuable player for the regular season will be made on Jan. 6, three days before the Super Bowl game, at Los Angeles. The winner will receive the Schick Trophy.

Despite his mikname, Mean Joe Greene does not have a reputation as a mean player. None of the Steelers do. Jack I ambert, the middle line-hacker, is considered wild, but not mean, not sneaky. As a ream, the Steelers are rough, but not mean, not sneaky. But under Al Davis, their managing general partner and former coach, the Raiders have developed a reputation for intimidation and dirty tricks.

Perhaps the ball was defective but students of Reider history prefer to believe it was another Raider plot. But against the Steelers, the Raiders have needed more than a plot. Two years ago the Raiders were limited to only 29 rushing yards in a 24-13 loss for the AF.C. title. Last year the Raiders lost, 16-10, even though Swann was knocked unconscious by Atkinson and Jack Tatum, the free safety. Joe Greene picked up his 180pound teammate as if he were a child and carried him to the bench. In this season's opener, which the Raiders won, 31-28, Atkinson leveled Swann with a forearm. No penalty. The of-ficials were looking upfield. That was the play that riled Chuck Noll.

"It's fontball with the intent to maim and that's not football," the Steeler coach said. "We have a criminal section in every aspect of society and apparently we have none in the N.F.L.—maybe we have a law-end-order problem. That was not particolarly an isolsted case. It's been going on for a couple of years and it's usually directed at one receiver." Atkinson was fined $1,500 by tha

"I don't feel I've done anything wrong, it was nothing intentional," Atkinson said. "I don't think it was that severe a bit. The bit I gave him last year was worse." A Broken Nose Not that Lynn Swann is Atkinson's only target. Against the New Eng-land Patrints in last week's playoff opener, Atkinson smashed Russ Francis, the big tight end, with a right hand that Muhammad Ali would have been proud of. Francis suffered a broken nose.

Swann is susceptible to concussions. He's had four in football, including three with the Steelers in three seasons.

"I'm a mere shadow of my former statistics," he said at midseason. "If this is the price I have to pay for being talented. I can only take so much and then my career will he over. Doctors have encouraged me to give it up."
But in the last four games, Swann has been spectacular—17 receptions for 298 yards and five touchdowns, including two against the Baltimore Colts in last week's playoff opener. Ironically, the Steelers would have it, you'll never have a dependable serve. It's that simple. . .

Prepare for the release hy holding the ball lightly between the tips of thumh and the index and middle fingers. Don't squeeze the ball; too tight a grip might put spin on it, which could result in a mis-hit.

Start your serve with both the ball and the racquet held out in front about chest high. Swing both arms down and then begin to bring your ball arm up as your racquet continues hackward and upward in a large, sweeping arc. You should bring your ball arm smoothly upward in almost a straight line. Don't bend it at the elbow. Keep it stretched out.

The momentum of your rising arm should lift the ball from your fingertips just after your hand passes the level of the top of your head. But keep the hall in your hand for as long as possihie; that way, you'll be better able to control its direction and height.

It's vital to lift the ball to the right height. And to be able to do that con-sistently. If the hall is placed too low, your serving motion will be cramped and awkward. If it goes too high; the ball will be failing rapidly as you hit it and your timing will suffer.

What is the right height? To find out, swing your racquet up to the point where you normally hit the ball. You should be reaching up with your hody, your arm fully extended.

Now, look at the middle of your racquet strings. That's where the ball should be when you bring your racquet around and over to hit it.

Practice lifting the ball to that exact height slightly to your right (or left if you're left handed) and out about a foot and a half in froot of yon. How? If you have a garage or a room with a high ceiling, you can hang a small object at the height the hall should go and practice lifting it to that point.
It's worth the time and effort because that's the best way to make the hall release the simple and automatic action you'd like it to be

U.S. Soccer Team Captain Says Players Lacked Fire

The story of the United States national team is a sad one. Just when everyone had high bopes it would advance to the next round of the World Cup, the squad lost, 3-0, to Canada in a playoff game last Wed-nesday and will have to News nesday and will have to wait four years before it competes for the World Seccer Cup again. Al Trost, the captain of the team, said one of the reasons the team lost was because it wasn't psyched up. "If everybody had been fired up like Smithy we would have won," Trost said hy phone from his home in St. Louis. He was referring to Bohhy Smith of the Cosmos who according to Trost, was the hest player. "Smithy was just super," the captain said.

"We had the better chances and we played well enough to win: it's just that we didn't finish our efforts with goals," Trost said. He said the players learned a lnt and that half of them should be back four years from now. The playoff game had to be held in a nentral country after the two nations finished tied for second place in a group won by Mexico. It was beld at Port-au-Prince, Haiti, before a sparse crowd of about 5,000. Did the Americans underestimate

Did the Americans underestimate tha Canadians after they saw them losing, 3-0, to a selection from Haiti last Saturday in a warmup game?

"I don't think so," came the reply from Trost. "We knew that game meant nothing. We have always had great respect for tha Canadians.

"It was a matter of who got the first goal," said Trost, twice named college player of the year while at St. Louis the St. Louis Stars in the North American Soccer League, said the American team and its coach, Walt Chyzowych, gained experience from the five games. "Our coach is a super coach," Trost said. "I am sure he learned from this, too, because now he has a better idea of what he needs. "We had a good start." he added.

"The players got together for quite a while and I don't think all the money the federation spent on the team was a waste."

For the preparation of the team and the five games, three against Canada and two against Mexico, it is estimated that the United States Soccer Federation spent about $175,000.

When the Cosmos announced two months ago they would play at the Meedowlands, they sold 34 season tickets the first two hours. Since then, the club has been swamped with orders and inquiries. Said Dieter Sayle, the ticket transfer of the same of t ticket manager. "We've received paid orders and inquiries for nearly 3,000 season tickets. It's a gratifying response from our fans, and priority locations will be hard to find if this pace keeps up."

Alan Ball, who helped England win the World Cup in London in 1966, was transferred from Arsenal to Southampton for $99,000 on Thursday. Ball, with a reputation as one of soccer's prob-lem boys, was wanted by several clubs. There is talk in North American Soccer League circles that Ball will play in the league next season.

The Dallas Tornado of the N.A.S.L. are withholding for a few more daya, the announcement that they have signed Al Miller, their coach, to a new, contract. Also, the Tornado have signed a 10-year contract with a radio station in Dallas.

in places like North Carolina, New Orleans, Oakland and Denver. That'a a: lot of distance between two people."

But it is not just the distance of miles. As llowit says, "I don't know why it is, but they end up being burt by each other all the time." Earlier this year they spent months not talking to each other. The reason had to do with their competition for Marques Johnson, a player from tha University of California, Los Angeles. As Larry tells it, the Nuggets were about to sign Johnson, who had agreed to pass up his final year of eligibility at U.C.L.A. When Larry told Herh about the signing, at the Olympic trials, Herb told Larry that the Pistons were also eager to sign Johnson, and a fight ensued between the teams. The merger between the A.B.A. and the N.B.A. was threatened, and Denver had to hack off from signing Johnson, who returned to college. Larry was so upset that he refused to talk to Herb for months. A Gesture of Closeness : The silence ended last month when Larry showed up in Detroit to watch a Pistons-Cavaliers game, Herb's team had started the season poorly—it's a curious pattern that Herb's teams always start poorly; some say it's due to a reaction to his aggressive personality, which takes time to adjust to-and his job was said to be in jeopardy. Noticing Larry in the stands, some Detroit reporters assumed that he wanted to be there for the execution. "That's wrong," Larry said, "I knew he was in trouble, and, hey, he's my brother. We couldn't go on like that, not talking. It's not right." The gesture wasn't lost on Herb.

"Larry really showed me something hy coming." Herb said. "He was there to give ma support, to show me I could. count on him. I won't forget it." After the game, which Detroit won, they spoke briefly.

There wasn't any need to say more; they both knew what they were there. Roger Brown (no relation) has played in the prop for both Herb and Lar. .

Herb said: "I'm glad you got here."

I almost didn't make it past last week."

Larry said: "No problem."

If there's any noticeable difference, it might be that Larry seems more introverted."

You wouldn't know that hy looking at him. He's a flamboyant dresser, the Daddy Rags of pro coaches in his velvet coats and gold necklaces. But that is more style than substance. Under-neath, his close friends say, is a very sby, insecure person, a person who wants desperately to be liked. The clothes are a costume; they shield the "I think it's painful for Larry to talk about his relationship with Herb," said Cart Scheer, a close friend and the president of the Nuggets, "I think it. bothers him that they don't get along hetter. Larry has this inability to hurt anyone. He's not comfortable disciplining players. He's much more comforta-ble, for example, being around kids than being around adults." Hero has lived with one-year contracts and insecurity so long that he's almost immune to them. If he appears to have more depth than his brother, the reason probably is that Larry is so gransful that people rarely need to get beneath Larry's image, Again, a matter of style. Herb is more challenging, more willing to be ahrasive. He sometimes scares players, the way he screams on the court. But be is also more willing to accept criticism, and it's a distinctive pattern in his career that late in the season, when player and coach have come to understand each other, Herb's teams invariably put together long winning streaks. There isn't a player on the Pistons who does not respect Herb's honesty. Casual Jokes -Carl Scheer was ready and willing to make much of Thursday's game. He wanted to have plaques made for each pointer of about 130 pounds, materialized out of the swirling gray and. thinking of Studer's admonition; I shot

I dressed it out with my penknife, which was inexcusably dull, and two hours later the deer was on its way to a family that works for Studer, a family that could use the meat

Most white-tail deer hunting in southwest Texas is done from plat-forms mounted atop trucks and four-wheel-driva vehicles or from towers, devices that enable one to see over the thick growth of mesquite and other trees and bushes that cover much of this flat land. Another technique that is used during the rutting season— which coincides with the deer season is to rattle a pair of antiers ingether. This often brings in bucks that believe that two other males are fighting for the attentians of a female.

Although Texas probably leads the oation lo deer killed by hunters each year, perhaps 250,000 animals, there is very little public bunting in the state, and nonresident hunters account for only about 1 percent of the licenses issued. Hunting rights are leased to individual or course on a daily fee dividuals or groups or on a daily fee basis, cr. sometimes, certain ranchers offer a package plao for various birds

The Coast Guard has established guidelines to assist volunteer groups that monitor the Citizens Band radio in relaying boating distress information. The guidelines are necessary to insure that a message gets through the various relay stations unchanged, explains Capt. Bernie E. Thompsoo, chief of staff for the Third Coast Guard District at Gover-nors Island. The boatman reach the Coast Guard directly on CB because the Coast Guard does not monitor CB channels, a task left to some 40 Radio Emergency Assistance Communication Teams from Delaware to Connecticut.

"Studies have shown that CB radin does not have adequately established and enforceable provisions to make it reliable enough to use in the boating safety service," Thompson says. In-stead, he urges boatmen to depend nn VHF-FM marine radios. Here the Coast Guard continuously monitors Channel 16 (156.8 MHz), the international distress and calling frequency.

To serve as an interface between tha CB user and the Coast Guard, organizations such as REACT should be equipped with a VHF-FM marine radio and a CB transceiver.

And to carry out an effective search. the Coast Guard needs the fullowing information: name and description of the boat; position; nature of the assistance required (is the boat in immediate danger?), number of persons on board; radio frequencies available; name of the owner or operator and his home port and telephone number, and the name and phone number of the original contact for confirmation and

Wrestles Inflation And Wins

By CARTER B. HORSLEY

Despite the heroic budget-trimming efforts of cooperative apartment buildings throughout the city in recent years, maintenance charges have steadily increased.

Even in times of relatively low inflation, the building that can actually reduce its annual maintenance charges is a very rare exception.

So it came as a pleasant surprise this month when residents in the cooperative complex at 110-118 Riverside Drive between 83d and 84th Streets learned that their total shareholder payments for maintenance would be reduced by 8.9 per cent

The Riverside Drive complex achieved its savings primarily by rebidding repair and maintenance contracts for its elevators, roof and waterproofing, by cutting its building service staff from 18 to 16 employees and hy repaying a $45,000 loan it had taken last year to meet a deficit.

The two buildings in the complex had previously converted their elevators to automatic, self-service, an increasingly popular economy move.

According to Brewster Ives, the head of Douglas Elliman-Gibbons & Ives, nne of the city's leading management firms, such "conversions are occurring in many buildings; all the elevator companies are working

Jay J. Gurfein, the president of the board of the 110-118 Riverside Tenants Corporation, said that the lowered maintenance would make the building's apartments more saleable by bringing their costs into line with other apartments in the area.

When the two buildings, erected in 1929, were converted to a single cooperative in 1968, the estimated maintenance charge per share was about $11.60. By this year, the charge bad climbed to $20.35.

The increase has actually been greater than these figures indicate because the building's board of directors imposed "artificial" assessments to make its maintenance charges appear more attractive to potential buyers of apartments.

For the last three years these assessments amounted to $2 per share. Therefore, each shareholder's payment last year for maintenance actually totaled $22.35 a share. There are 167 apartments with 9921/2 rooms and 4491/2 bathrooms in the complex, which has a total of 48,203 shares.

Maks Etingin of Orside Realty, the cooperative's managing agent since last spring, said that the board would levy no assessment this year and not increase the maintenance charges. This results in effectively lowering the total shareholder payment $2 per

Mr. Etingin noted that the complex bad extended its first existing mortgage recently at a high interest rate but expected to refinance when it and a second mortgage expired in 1979. Most cooperative buildings that manage to achieve a cash surplus save it for emergencies rather than using it to reduce maintenance

Mr. Gurfein said that he expected the building would be able to improve its cash position at the time of refinancing.

According to Mr. Ives, many buildings have begun "recasting their mortgages" and agreeing to higher interest rates in return for longer amortization, which offers shareholders increased tax deductions and the bone that interest rates might actually fall.

Other means to stabilize maintenance costs include lowering the temperature at which a building ia heated in the winter, limiting the hours when heating is provided, and substituting fluorescent for incandescent lighting in the common areas. The latter resulted in savings for one East Side building last year of about $20,000, according to Mr.

But for many people in buildings that have tried most of these solutions and still face increased costs. the search continues. One of the newest schemes is to replace the steam Continued on Page 3, Col. 1

The new owner, as it happens, is Francis Fleetwood, my brother. Watching him at work on the dilapidated old place, watching the transformation slowly take place, I feit: what can only be described as an obligation to look back into its past.

What I found resembles the history of a small, much-disputed territory through which many generations of occupying armies have come and gone, imposing different laws, different religions, different cultures, even different languages.

The original architect. John Jardine, built the house, along with those on either side of it, in 1884 for $12,000 each (approximately $77,800 in today's money). The elevated railway line along Ninth Avenue (now. Columbus) had been completed in 1880. In those days of muddy. clogged streets the elevated stop two blocks away on 81st Street made the fnur-story, single-family houses seem like a good investment.

Seventy years earlier the small plot of land had been part of the country estate of W. W. Woolsey. His farm stretched from 82d Street and Central Park West to the Bloomingdale Road (now Broadway) and north to 86th Street.

Near where 69 West 83d Street now stands there was a small worker's cottage beside a stream that :. meandered back and forth along what is now Columbus Avenue.

Such a pastoral scene was not to last for long. During the eighteenforties and fifties the estates on the upper West Side fell into disuse. The area filled up with squatters' shanties. An 1880 photograph shows acres of barren open land marked by occasional shanties, vegetable gardens, menacing rock outcroppings and decrepit 18th- and 19th-century mansions.

The building or the Ninth Avenue elevated line had attracted many speculators to the area. By 1881 the Dakota Apartment House, just off one of the railway stops on 72d Street, was completed. It was called the Dakota because in those days 72d Street was considered so far away that it might as well have been in "the Dakotas." Soon after construction Jardine

of industry and manufacturing. The housing stock fell victim to blockbusting in the late 'sixties and early seventies, when mortgage lending companies, government officials and local real estate brokers scared whites into selling in the face of the Hispaoic influx. The speculators went to jail. But the foreclosed properties remain, and the once-tidy residential blocks are today pocked with hundreds of abendoned, deteriorating homes.

"The F.H.A. is responsible for the condition of the horsing stock there," contends Farvey Schultz, director of the Brooklyn office of the City Planning Commission. "It's the result of the mortgage scandals."

The housing trauds figure significantly in the present dispute as the issue of Federal responsibility has become a part of the debate. Mr. Schultz and community leaders argue that the F.H.A. has a moral responsibility to reinsure, because of the past. Federal officials do not agree, saying the question is whether or not the area is a Suitable one in which to write mortgage

This is quite a change from 1969, when the community formed the Redevelopment Committee to do the job in coalition with Lutheran Medical Center, the city'e largest such Federal facility.

The hospital took the first step. Its board of directors bypassed an opportunity to relocate into Bay Ridge, a prosperous middle-income community. and decided instead to open new expanded facilities in an abandoned factory in the depressed neighborhood, becoming the first nonindustrial concern along the waterfront. The hope was that the bealth center, with its 300 badly needed new jobs, would act as a transfusion for revitalization.

The community planned to rescue the housing stock through a nonprofit group, the Sunset Bay Housing Corporation, which proposed to buy the abandoned properties, renovate them, and then sell them at cost to low-and moderate-income families.

The hospital-community coalition, which seemed e winning team, was immediately embroiled in conflicts with the city. The hospital site, including the abandoned factory building and much of the surrounding residential area, was owned by the Economic. Development Administration as part of the Great Industrial Land Bank pro-

For the hospital to move there and serve the homes required changes in city policy, rezoning and rerouting traffic. There was also a prolonged battle over the proposed relocation of the Fort Greene wholesale meat market in the depressed neighborhood, which many mistakenly saw at first as a threat to the bospital project.

These problems were frustrating but eventually resolved. "We were successful in moving the city bureaucracy,' says Miss Wylde. "In the end they even gave us $40,000 for e planning study." The new $63 million, 500-bed medical center is scheduled to open in March. The housing rehabilitation project also enjoyed a series of triumphs, mostly at the beginning. Following the mortgage scandals, the community won a court suit that halted F.H.A. plans for mass sales. They obtained funding from such prestigious organizations as the Carnegie, Ford and Edna McDonnell Clark Foundations, as well as insurance companies, utilities and local banks. A $250,000 fund was created to buy and renovate homes and a $167,000 revolving loan fund to help low-income buyers, The community effort was burt most by inflation. In 1971, the corporation could gut and renovate a two-storyplus-cellar building for an owner and one tenant for $22,000. Today it costs $33,000. While costs have risen, however, the appraised market value of the homes bere bas remained relatively stationary at about $25,000 or less.

The widening gap between cost and value undermined sales. Five years ago a bouseholder with e steady job could buy a renovated home for $200 down. Now a buyer must put down at least $5,000, a bardship for most. In some cases, ways were found to soften the blow-one electrician wired his home in lieu of a downpay payment.

Wheo the corporation could oo longer break even selling to low-income famities, they sought moderate- and middle-income buyers. "We sold to anyone who could buy, for what we could get," said Miss Wylde.

Another effect of this gap between cost and value was that it revealed a serious flaw in the project's "shotgun approach"-buying single properties scattered throughout the area. "It didn't make enough impact to fix one house here, one house there," explains Miss Wylde. "We realized we needed to do entire blocks to make any impact on appraisal values."

Subsequently the community sat down with the city and jointly developed a more comprehensive program. Last summer this was submitted to the F.H.A., which refused to underwrite the project.

The city appealed and, in October, the F.H.A. reconsidered the proposal. It was again refused, but the agency offered to "entertain" a new proposal for one or two blocks that form a corridor to the hospital, "as a pilot project to see if it will work," according to Jay Nugent Lopes, assistant regional

City Councilman Thomas Cuite is now leading a new appeal effort.

"Ooe block isn't enough to make a difference in a community so hard-bit," he commented. "It isn't meaningful. We need to do 25 in two years to make an impact." He is "optimistic" that the Federal agencies can be persuaded to expand their involvement. A meeting between city and Federal officials is planned, but no date set.

While the city seeks to expand and H.U.D. to limit Federal financial involvement, Sunset Park anxiously waits, its abandoned properties deteriorating. The F.H.A. owns roughly 1,000 properties in Brooklyn, concentrated around the Sunset Park and East New years the mud streets were replaced by cobblestone, and the singlefamily rowhouses filled up with prosperous merchants earning from $25,000 to $100,000 a year. Each house had three or four servants, mainly "Irish girls," who occupied the gabled attics.

If the community-city plsn isn't workable, as Federal officials believe, what happens to these? Mr. Lopes says they can be written off, or the agency can sell them for cash to buyers who must promise to repair them, or it can pay to renovate them and give the purchaser a warranty for an F.H.A. mortgage.

For the next 20 years the growth on the West Side was phenomenal. The avenues, Ninth (Columbus) and Tenth (Amsterdam) were sooo lined with fiveand six-story tenement houses crammed with the recently arrived Irish immigrants, Big apartment houses were huilt along Central Park West, on some of the side streets, and on Broadway, West End Avenue, and Riverside Drive.

The value of 69 West 83d Street rose steadily in those years. By 1890 it was worth about $26,000 ($167,000 in 1976 money) and hy 1904 about $35,000 ($224,000). Ed Wessel bought the house in 1908 for about $40,000 ($256,000) and kept it for about 18 years until 1926, it was sold to John Marchian.

Although records and recollections are not clear on this point, it seems that he ran it as a rooming house. Most of the other bouses on the block were still single-family homes owned by the old-line Protestant families.

Alice Goldmark, who moved onto the block in 1925, remembers that some of the families used to have weekly recitals by well-known string quartets. A few of the bouses, according to other old-timers, had turned into discreet, elegant bordellos visited nightly by a carriage trade.

The area's oew found prosperity lasted only about 40 years. The onset of the Depression in 1933 caused almost every family on the block to lose their homes to the savings banks. Ida oudreau and her husband Lou moved onto the block in 1936 as leaseholder for a rooming house.

She remembers that the banks divided up most of the single-family homes into 16 or 20 individual rooms and leased the bouses out to people like herself to be run as rooming houses.

The rents ranged from $4 to $7 a week. In 1944 Mrs. Boudreau and ber busband bought their house for $14,000. The Unioo Savings Bank forclosed on No. 69 the same year, and sold it to Alfred Nelson, who ran it as a rooming bouse until 1954.

A Columbian woman who was a tenant in the bouse from 1942 to 1974 described the oeighborhood when she first lived there: There were no Spanisb or blacks at all on the block: I was the first one. The synagogue

The company is moving to a onestory service and warehouse center in the Hartz Mountain Industrial Park off Route 3 from 72-02-51st Street in Woodside, Queens, The move will affect more than 50 employees.

Howard Kays, vice president of the David T. Houston Company of Bloomfield, N. J., was the broker.

Madison Ave. Lease

The Skandin America Reinsurance Corporation, with executive offices at 280 Park Avenue, has leased for 10 years the entire fourth floor, totaling 11,000 square feet, at 415 Madison Aveone for an aggregate rental of more

The space will be used for the firm's accounting and data processing depart-

Brokers were Kenneth B. Dean, senior vice president, and John M. Cefaly, assistant vice president of Cushman & Wakefield, Inc.

Midtown Lease

Acthur Frommer Enterprises Inc., a group of companies involved in varied activities in the travel field, has signed a 10-year lease for approximately 17,-500 square feet at 380 Madison Avenue. The aggregate rental is in excess of $1.3 million. The company, now at 70 Fifth Avenue, will move to the new address eating system serviced by Consoliated Edison with an oil burning ant. For while the costs of oil have sen sharply in the last few years, am rates have gone up even more. There are about 500 apartment buildgs in Manhattan that use the Condidated Edison steam, including both operatives and rentals. Not all of em, however, can make the converon, which requires sufficient room

Arthur H. Lerner of Heimsley-Spear, Inc. was the broker.

Louis Smadbeck, the head of the real estate firm of Wm. A. White & Sons, said that this approach was being undertaken at 136 East 64th Street, a rental property. The projected new heating costs are estimated to be about 25 percent a year below those of the steam system, he said.

'A number of other buildings, such as the cooperative at 50 Central Park West at 65th Street, are following suit. One building manager antcipated an annual savings of perhaps 40 percent

It's a very popular number. Thousands of people call it every day... for a variety of reasons. To sell a house, find a job, offer a car, make a business connection, rent an apartment, sell a baby buggy or a basset hound.

On the other end is a New York Times want ad taker.

One of 80 plus who provide prompt, efficient service to New York's buying-selling public. However, Times want ad takers just don't take your ad, They help you with it.

Offer suggestions on headlines, text, abbreviations, use of type and white space, costs and ways to save money.

Make a good connection next time you need to place a want ad. Call (212) OX 5-3311 between 9 A.M. and 5:30 P.M.

Are you a suburbanite?

It may be more convenient to call The New York Times regional office nearest you. In Nassau, 747-0500; in Suffolk, 669-1800; in Westchester, WHite Plains 9-5300; in New Jersey, MArket 3-3900; in Connecticut, 348-7767. Call between 9 A.M. and 4:45 P.M., Monday through Friday.

three older children were oozing tears. The fourth-6-year-old Mary-knew a calamity had occurred, but didn't understand; she began to cough and cry in a kind of croupy cadence.

We had arrived at a public campground about 20 miles south of Tampa at 9 o'clock the previous night on our way from beachcombing on Sambel Is-order to get a fresh start Christmas Day for Orlando and Disney World. But we wasted hours there trying to find a place for the night-there was no room at the campground for us on Christmas Eve.

Finally, we found a private campground off the main highway-a few dozen electrical hookups on either side of a bumpy dirt road, a tiny office with rusty can openers and dusty suntan lotion and a pay phone outside. Not a dream of a campground, but we had no choice. By the time we were bedded down, everyone was ex-

Now here we were, out in the gray morning half-light, shrouded in fog from a nearby lagoon, shivering in 55degree temperatures on a dismal gravel campaite.

We took stock of our situation. That didn't take much time at all. Most of the other campers had left the night before, on the way to holiday celebrations, I assumed. The three or four vehicles remaining were closed up tight; no one seemed to be stirring behind those curtained windows.

My husband, Bernard, and I looked at each other and shrugged wordlessly. It had been that kind of vacation, our fortunes swinging up and down in a fluctuation that had strained the tempers of us all.

First night out from New Orleans we froze. The temperature took a sudden, unusual dip, and we quickly learned that the metal walls of the camper were not much for warmth. The following morning, as we stiffly onwrapped ourselves from tropicalweight blanket cocoons, Mary asked wonderingly. "Why is the bread floating in the bathtub?" (It had been stored there.) Not just bread, as it turned out, but an Abercrombie and Fitch leather briefcase jammed with Bernard's legal papers. (They dried out quite adequately, though, when separated page by page and hung with wooden pins on a clothesline.) No one ever did explain why the bathtub drain had suddenly backed up with waste water from the sink.

But none of our vicissitudes could match our situation on Christmas morning as the fog lifted and we plainly saw the hopelessness of the tangle of charred wire that had been the van's ignition system.

We all had our characteristic reactions. The oldest daughter, 14, retreat-natural settings that minister to those with a taste for privacy along with their sun, sand and sea.

One does not head for either resort seeking a lively social life, rousing entertainment, organized activities, plush accommodations. There are, for example, no telephones in the rooms, no television or radio, no air-conditioning, no nightclubs, no gambling. And there are two very significant reasons why one should he certain that he wants this kind of vacation: The resorts are rather remote and extraordinarily ex-

Cancel Bay is on St, John in the United States Virgin Islands. The route: by jet to St. Thomas, by taxi or Rockresorts van to Red Hook Landing, by ferry ($6) to the resort. Prices for a double room in season (Dec. 20 to April 15) range from $155 to $175 a day, breakfast and dinner

Little Dix is on Virgin Gorda in the British Virgin Islands. The route: by jet to San Juan or St. Thomas, by small plane to Virgin Gorda, Price for a double room in season is $170 a day, all meals included.

At both resorts there is a daily, perperson service charge of $9.50 to obviate tipping (except, of course, for luncheon at Cancel Bay). And a 3 percent British Virgin Islands Government tax is added to the bills of guests at Little Dix Bay. Assuming the purchase of some duty-free liquor for the return flight and the imbibing of some liquor on the premises, a New York area couple can figure on spending $2,000 for a one-week in-season vacation at Little Steep, to say the least. Rates do dip considerably, however, during off-season, and there are several off-season package plans that have a more reasonable sound. In 1976, for exampie, a couple could spend seven days and six nights at Caneel for $525.

Last month I devoted four days to an all-too-brief sampling of the two resorts. My tan has faded, but as I sit at the typewriter in my Manhattan spartment, waiting for the heat to come up, I find that the memories linger on....

The St. Thomas sirport is not my favorite, for reasons that range from a tacky, inconvenient terminal to a short runway. An inbound jet crashed there last spring; 37 passengers were killed. All of the appropriate authorities agree that the length of the run-

LAKER AND WORLD

Two recent developments have given small degree of hope to those who favor low-cost air shuttle service be-tween the United States and Europe and between the East and West Coasts. The efforts of British-based Laker Airways to institute Skytrain service between New York and Londoo at a one-way fare of $135 received a boost when a British Court ruled that the Government had acted improperly in rescinding Laker's authority to operate the proposed shuttle. At about the same time the United States Court of Appeals in Washington ruled that World Airways, a nonscheduled carrier, was within its rights in asking the Civil Aeronautics Board for authority to offer scheduled transcontinental flights at a proposed one-way

Both airlines have additional obstacles to overcome before either can begin operating its low-cost service, but spokesmen for both said they would continue to pursue their plans. Laker must wait to see if the British Government appeals the latest court decision to the House of Lords and must also obtain formal approval from the President of the United States, a move already recommended by the C.A.B. World must gain C.A.B. approval of its application, which previously was rejected on the ground that as a nonscheduled catrier it- was not legally qualified to operate scheduled service. World proposes to fly from: two cities on the East Coast, Washington and Newark, and two on the West Coast. Oakland in northern California and Ontario in southern California.

A NEW LIFE

The Broad Street Station in Richmond, a railway terminal built in 1919, is being converted into the Science Museum of Virginia. At present the museum occupies only 6,000 square leet of the 100,000-square-foot abanby "providing elegance in everything doned station, but officials are bopeful that ultimately the state-operated facility will have enough exhibits to fill tastes." The airline also intends to inthe entire structure. Exhibits currently being installed deal with astronomy, marine science, physics and logic. The formal opening of the museum is scheduled for Jan. 9 and school groups only will be accommodated for the first few weeks. The facility is not expected to be open to the general public until Feb. 1. Admission will be 25 cents.

Letters: Pollution And the Parthenon

While on a recent visit to Athens, I promised my Greek friends that noon my return bome I would speak out about the visual pollution in the "Cradle of Democracy." On my first visit to the city in 1961, I was so thrilled to visit the shrines of antiquity that I returned six years later with an archeologist. Athens was still the

But this year it is a different story. What a shock to look toward the hills surrounding the city and see them wreathed in smog. No longer is the "rosy-fingered dawn" of Homer able to creep over the Parthenoo, the greatest building in the Western world. And if you look toward the Acropolis, you will see, borror upon horror, the Parthenon blocked out by a dozen flashing electric signs. I took pictures of them and intend to complain to the presidents of these companies with so little taste that they are willing to put a few drachmas before art. The jumble includes such names as Ethiopian Air, American Express and Coca-Cola.

Americans and Greeks should be up in arms about this. If we do not stop this pollotion now, there will be nothing left for our grandchildren to appreciate. And this brings me to the problem of the automobile in Athens. Cars are killing the city. The exhaust emissions are eating np the statues and blocking out the sun. A good planning commission would take a tip from the Japanese and circle the city with a monorail so that there would be no need for cars to enter the inner city. Athens must be sayed.

Noise pollution in our technological society has reached obnoxious proportions, some of which is difficult to abate. One source, however, can be eliminated immediately, and that is the type and volume of music insinuated among flight announcements in air terminals and in aircraft.

My husband and I recently suffered the anguish of sitting in a DC-10 for an hour on the departure of the aircraft from Gatwick, in London, and again on arrival et Kennedy in New York, and listening to a repetitive tape-recording of approximately seven vocal recordings blasting over our heads, while awaiting loading, and unloading of passengers. The recordings were repeated at least three times while the aircraft was on the ground.

The sounds were abrasive to the ears of even the most dedicated discothèque devotees, and to weary travelers were another means of shredding aiready travel-worn nerves. We requested the stewardess on several occasions to stop the music or reduce the volume, but we were informed that the music was intended to "soothe the passengers," and our requests were denied.

Who decided that passengers sitting ln air terminais wish background music as an accompaniment to constant announcements of flight information, most of which is barely audible over the sound of aircraft flying?

Who would not prefer a reprieve from this incessant noise, while waiting in a terminal or io a plane? Surely, only the most addicted members of our society who abbor quiet and need noise for courishment of their souls and bodies could object to a decrease of noise. Are they the majority? If they are, then I question their right to impose upon me, and others who share my views, their musical tastes. I do not inflict mine upon the public; I resent others inflicting theirs upon me.

In department stores, supermarkets and other places of business where background music is foisted on the public, one has the option of protest, and if the protests are ignored, one can leave. That option is oot available to the public in terminals and aircraft. MRS. ELIZABETH PEARMAN

Arlington, Va.

APARTMENTS - Budget-minded families visiting Puerto Rico would do well to consider renting an apartment or a villa by the week. That reduces the daily rate to about $7 to $12 a person for groups of six. Heidi Steigar, 2019 Cacique Street, Ocean Park, Santurca P. R. 00911 (tel: 809-727-6248), a rental agent handles many apartments on and off the heach in San Juan. Ratee range from $175 for a stodio to $250 weekly for e two-bedroom unit. In the Dorado area, 30 miles west of San Juan, Gail Silva, Box 755, Dorado, P.R. 00646 (tel. 809-796-1362), rents three-bedroom villas within the Dorado del Mar resort complex for $500 a week. For $75 e family, ranters can use the resort's golf club, tehnis courts and swimming pool. The tennis courts and pool are otherwise available for $2.50 a person e day. Apartments in the Luquillo Beach area, 30 miles east of San Juan, may be obtained through Rohin Kesner, 2 South Road, Harrison, N. Y. 10528 (tel: 914-835-0928). Three-bedroom apartments rant for $350 a week.

DINING—Dining in Puerto Rico can he a culinary delight. The island has some fine Chinese, French, Italian, Spanish and seafood res-taurants that are as good as any in major United States cities. Among my favorites are Rotisserie Castillo in the Caribe Hilton, which serves seafood, Spanish and rib-roast dinners in the $15-to-$20 when a six-footer in his late 20's, dressed in khaki trousers and flannel shirt; appeared in the camper doorway hearing a large tool kit.

He hade us "hello," and without another word he sat down on the floor of the van by the driver's seat and went to work. We said "hello," and watched wonderingly as he pulled lengths of charred wire from the vehicle's innards. Then he started putting in new wires, deep in a great dazzling tangle. attaching and cutting and twisting with quick defi motions.

We were hypnotized and sirald to say a word. Finally, after an hour, one of us saked, 'How's it going!

"Fine" he said.
After two more hours I asked, "What do you do for a living, sir?"

As he gathered up his tools, wire scraps and tool box, he said, "I'm a test driver in Detroit. Your camper will work now?"

He refused the money we offered, said we owed him nothing. It was Christmas morning, he said. He'd heard we were headed for Dis-ney World, and he thought we'd better be on our way. "Merry Christmas," he added and left.

Bernard turned on the re-wired ignition. The engine turned over faster than it ever had before and proceeded to purr. And we drave out of the campground and down the highway, past groves of trees biszing with oranges under a height blue sky, all the way to Orlando, Mary didn't cough once more all day.

Three Months Across Asia on $20 a Day

a meal, make a bed or work overtime for six months. We saw half the world and the people in it. We traveled by ship, train, bus, car, ferry, rickshaw and all manner of horse-drawn yehicles. And what in particular colors our memories of the trip with a golden glow, what turns even the vexatious or horrifying moments into cheerful anecdotes, is the immodest realization that we did it.

In the first weeks of the trip, places to sleep were our greatest worry. No matter how many times we had added, subtracted and divided, the budget refused to yield more than $20 a day for room and food for the four of us, so we would not be staying at firstclass hotels. But as things worked out, finding clean, comfortable, cheap hotels turned out to be sufficiently easy so that we upped our expectations to add a good view to our list of basic hotel room necessities.

The best tips came from people chance met on the train or bus, Local civil servants were particularly useful informants, because they too were trying to satisfy middle-class tastes on limited allowances. In the last extremity, even taxi drivers are belpful. You can be sure the hotel belongs to a cousin, but the ride provides plenty of time to bargain. Our worst nights, when I couldn't sleep for fretting over the cost or the cleanliness, came when we abandoned all initiative in favor of the false security of a guidebook listing.

After much trial and exhausting error, we discovered what to do when informants failed us. We went directly from train or bus to the nearest coffee shop or cafe, where I waited, surrounded by the huggage and the children, while Steve reconnoitred. Freed of suitcases and of children saying helpful things like, "I'm tired," he was able to walk farther and bargain better. In this way, he found us a threeroom suite in Bangkok's Royal Hotel, with windows looking out over the Parade Ground to the curlicue towers of the old palace and temple, for $12 a night.

Transportation was another continning worry. We were no sooner off one train than we had to begin to think about the next. But we never missed a connection, never arrived at the station to be told our train had just leftbecause Steve is never less than an hour early for anything, and Asian trains seldom less than an hour late. So we spent a lot of time sitting amid our clutter of luggage, islands of nervous waiting in a sea of families camped in corners, beggars by the steps, vendors of tea and sweets. Then a whistle would signal an approach or departure, and the platform life would shift and re-form into new patterns, the families gathering bundles and rolling mats, tea sellers racing toward the oncoming coaches crying "Drink quick, drink" quick," so the cups could be refilled and sold again before the market blew its whistle and went away.

We usually bought our tickets several days ahead, as soon as we had decided how long we might like to stay in whatever town we were in,

and had determined what means of transportation went on to our nextdestination. It was always possible to book seats or a sleeper, though they might not always be what we had expected. We made five train journeys through the Indus, bought the same class of tickets each time and never had the same kind of accommodation twice. Only one thing remained constant. Of every station master, Steve asked, "Is there a dining car on the train?" And everyone auswered, "Oh yes, yes." There never was.

It took us half of Asia to decide what kind of transport we ought to he riding. The choice between buses and trains was easy. Buses were for traveling where trains did not go. Not because buses were less efficient or less comfortable. In Thailand and India, they were often faster, newer, plusher, even more reliable than trains. In Afghanistan, they were all there was. Pure sentiment inclined us to train travel. The wheels of buses do not click along the ties, and no bus has ever let loose with a plaintive whistle in the night.

The choice between first and other classes of travel was more difficult. For many aching, overcrowded miles we condemned ourselves to the wooden benches and crowds of third class because we felt we wouldn't be real overlanders otherwise. We changed to first class when we realized that we had never met anyone in a third-class coach. Our linguistic inabilities had limited communication to smiles. In first-class carriages, however, there was always a civil servant en route to Simla, a medical student between terms or a family bound for the beaches, all eager for a chat in English.

People are met briefly on the overland route, and then gone forever, despite exchanged addresses and solemn promises to meet again. But the place and the circumstances conspired to make us remember these momentary friends with clarity and affection. In northern Thailand, we were taken np into the mountains by an agricultural officer who was training the tribesmen of the bills to grow cut flowers and strawberries, part of an unavailing program to wean the black-garbed and secret tribes from their staple cash crop, opium.

In Chandigarh, India, a new town built by Le Corbusier, the dentist gave up his siesta to cure my toothache, then woke up the rest of his family. so that we could take tea and admire the view of solid mountains and even more solid huildings from his roof. We had thought Chandigarh's concrete respectability harren after the pulsating life of India's older towns, but he made us see it through the proudly possessive eyes of the Indian middle class.

In Kabul, Afghanistan, a leather merchant closed his shop to share with us his lunch of goat's milk cheese and tomatoes. The shop was a sideline for him. He had worked 20 years for the American Embassy in Kabul, and won the prize he'd wanted for his labors, his oldest son at college in Minnesota.

From Peshawar, in Pakistan's northwest, the government-owned buses iun across the Afghan border to Kabul,

"We saw half the world and the people in it, traveling by ship, train, bus, car, ferry, rickshaw and all manner of horse-drawn vehicles. We were no sooner off one train than we had to think about the next."

a journey of only a few miles on the map, but the road twists and switchbacks up sheer mountains to reach the Khyber Pass, then climbs again onto the harsh plateau of the Hindu Kush. There were four other Americans on the bus. They sported the caste marks of a pilgrimage to India—the boys in white dhotis, one girl wrapped in a paisley shawl, the other with a gold ring through one pierced nostril. Paisley shawl offered me a puff on the communal joint. Conversation seemed called for. "Did you like Peshawar?" I volunteered, remembering the mountain Pathans in brown turbans and matching cartridge belts, the goats wandering unafraid through the market place crush of tongas, motorbikes, see if Om train got in at midnight, and we came right over here to get the bus."

The dusty road unwound across the brown countryside, past mud-walled villages that would sink back into the plains at the next rainy season, past lanky goats and burros much smaller than the mounded loads they pulled. Heather and Chris were gived to the windows counting goats. The four pilgrims were asleep.

Suddenly we were climbing, the road hitching back and forth to find purchase on the stark slopes. On one side, bare rock faces towered over us, broken by scattered heaps of fallen boulders. On the other, the land dropped sheer into the distance of rock-strewn valleys, a river gleamed silver far below. Across the narrow valley, mountains rose again, bare, stack and temble. On a rocky outcrop, a gaunt fort shadowed the pass.

were placques of bronze and marble, bonoring the Kings Own Khyber Rifles, the Men of the Forty-Seventh, nineteenth century soldiers who had guarded this outermost point of the British Empire. It was hard not to imagine the scene: Pathan warriors above, brown turbans and khaki coats blending with the boulders; below, the bright red coats of the Kings Own Khybers ablaze against the rocks. The four pilgrims, fast asleep, missed it

We broke our journey at every excuse. We wanted to stop everywhere, stay endiessly, see everything "This is a waiking day," Steve would say (to groans from Heather and Chris) and we would set off down the wide and tree-lined streets of Singapore where every neighborhood is a different nation, or wander through a Thai village, knowing that any path would lead us to an ornate temple, set like . a white and gold powder puff in the palms. We were held up for an hour in Lahore, much to the children's glee. because the bullocks and water buffalo were parading placidly home, hundreds of them moving stolidly up the narrow city lane.

"This is a museum day," I would announce, and we would plunge into the salvaged flotsam of the past-the Lahore museum, a wondrous attic jumbled with the treasures of seven civilizations; the lofty punty of the Bangkok museum, where contemplating Buddhas turn the history of Thailand to serune repose.

Christopher liked museums too little, Heather too much, Sedate ramblings through the statuary were not for our Chris, and we finally realized that good museums have gardens where fittle boys and their toy soldiers can camp. Heather's needs were more exhausting to meet. She wanted a story for every Persian painting: "Why is that lady sitting on a swing? Why is that man's face blue? Are they happy? Then what happened to them?"

"This is a temples and ruins day," we would declare, and lose space and time in the infinite traceries and stylized flowers that pattern the white marble of the Taj, or sit beneath the gaudy gold friezes of the house of the emerald Buddha, telling the children tales of his ascetic life.

"This is a kids day," the children would plead, and we would go to yet another heach or zoo. Asia's best landscaped zoo is in Delhi, but we and the animals were alone there. Why does no one go to the zoo? "Perhaps it irritates them to see animals better fed than people," an Indian friend sug-

"This," we would sigh, "is an errand day"-train tickets, toothpaste and the post office. Traveling light meant mailing all our purchases bome. (To our aurprise, they all arrived, though we were home before them.) The post office in Peshawar demanded we check in at three windows, one for weighing, one for buying stamps, another for handing over the parcel. After an hour at the stamp window, Steve emerged pale, exhausted, and stampless. There was no queue, just a shouting, heaving crush of barried bodies, all in a frenzy to get a stamp before the window shut, Then we learned that the Moslem seclusion of women has its advance he a few days we were well enough tages: At the separate window for notice the misty blue of the Bosphon manager; we borrowed Laurance Rockefeller's island car for the occasion, the only air-conditioned convertible Volkswagen I've ever seen. Highlight of the tour was a stop at Cottage 7, a six-room structure that houses the likes of Fritz Mondale and Henry Kissinger. Its rooms are elegantly furnished, its view spectacular-and ordinary folk can rent space there (at the deluxs price) when they have not been pre-empted by Rockefeller and friends.

I found the food at Cancel to be of gournet quality for the Caribbean, whose resorts are in no way famed for fine meals, but during my short Stay I was hardly bowled over, A rack of lamb was tender and julcy, but a grouper was tough. The cold fruit bisque is recommended a refreshing pures of blueberry and apple. Desserts were elaborate, and tasty, a fart raspberry pie my favorite.

The dining ambience, on the other hand, was altogether a joy. The three restaurant areas are all open to evening breezes. At Caneel Beach and Sugar Mill, one looks out over moonlit waters; at Turtle Bay, one is surrounded by trees and flowering shrubs. Diners dress for the occasion, just this side of formel—the men in jackets, the women in pajamas and the like.

Service, a problem at many Caribbean resorts, is first rate. Waiters are attentive and amiable, A fork was lacking when the waiter delivered my raspberry pie at Turtle Bay; would be remember, I wondered. He did, and Still, though the rooms be pleasant and the food eminently edible, they hardly explain the lure of Cancel. Its 90-pins percent occupancy rate in season, for example, when 85 percent of the guests are returnees.

The natural beauty of the place is part of the answer. Paths bordered by 72 varieties of plants lace the property; buildings are unobtrusively sited, surrounded by trees and vines. Easy trails have been laid out through overgrown areas. I walked the Hawksnest Trail, a 20-minute stroll along a cliff's edge beside the water, past huge century plants, accompanied by tiny lizards and an occasional mongoose, An exhilarating, solitary interlude not normally associated with the grounds of a tourist resort.

There are more walking trails at nearby Virgin Islands National Park, along with some of the world's most exciting snockeling and scube diving sites. Daily tours go forth from Caneel for water sports, including a new offering-en "aquanant walk." A diving bell apparatus permits one to walk on the ocean floor for a close-up view of life on a coral reef. There are sailboat tours, as well, and motorboats activities carry nominal extra fees.) The hallmark of Caneel, though, is not to be found in its activities and facilities, but rather in its calm, easy atmosphere. Many—though by no means all—of the in-season guests are in their 60's: lively, alert, active people of substance who spend their days hiking and swimming, who rise early in the morning and are ready for bed after dinner. They are affable folk, ready for a chat, but they treasure their privacy. And they treasure the feeling the resort conveys of Being Taken Care Of. This month, Caneel Bay Plantation celebrates its 20th

The Creative Touch

Christopher Columbus visited the area in 1493 and liked the look of it all. So did Laurance S. Rockefeller, 459 years later, cruising the Caribbean on a family holiday.

First came Caneel Bay, site of an old sugar mill plantation and a small, undeveloped resort; a massive program brought in electricity, built a water system, created a modern tourist facility. Ownership was given over to Jackson Hole Preserve, a nonprofit education and conservation organization; and the Rockefellers made possible the creation of the Virgin Islands Netional Park on the island.

Rockresorts, Inc., manages Caneel Bay, along with such other projects as Dorado Beach and Cerromar Beach in Puerto Rico, the Mauna Kea Beach Hotel in Hawail the Jackson Lake Lodge in Wyoming.

the Woodstock Inn in Vermont. And Little Dix Bay, the second of the sites eyed by Rockefeller on that Caribbean boliday.

Early on, he had announced his goal, in the resort field: "to go to the frontiers of natural beauty and keep them in harmony with the locale." And he added, "It takes time and money. ... " Little Dix was the prime example. Starting from scratch. Rockefeller proceeded to bring in power, create a road system, build a desalinization plant. Construction lasted from 1961 to '64, and when it was done, Little Dix was said to be the most expensive hotel to build per room in his-

A notable example: a buffet that included crab and smoked salmon among the cold dishes, curried chicken among the hot, with a choice of six fine desserts topped by a strawberry mousse.

More significant, however, were the similarities between the two Rockresorts. The paths among imaginatively landscaped acres rich in plantlifepipe organ cactus, pink oleander, calabash trees. The late-afternoon presence of sandflies, happily of short duration. The lack of games in the game areas, of books and magazines in the library area-which is to say, the total de-emphasis on "entertaining" the guests. There was a "program" at Little Dix one night, a slide presentation that turned out to be a dull, ill-illustrated view of the resort itself. An exception: Another evening, a most talented steel band played for dancing that went on until 10:30 or so.

Little Dix has the same variety of water sports activities as its larger sister resort, and it similarly offers a special ettraction for lovers: a day at a deserted island beach. In company with a friend, I decided to try it out, and at 10 A.M. one morning we were deposited, along with picnic lunch, on the Pond Bay beach, a 10-minote motorboat ride from Little Dix.

Little Dix Bay

According to manager Lidicker,

As the sound of the boat faded, we looked about us. A stretch of perfect beach backed by hills, and not another person in sight. Ultimate romance.

I had just doffed my bathing suit for some skinnydipping when a sudden noise intruded opon the perfect stillness. Into our bay-for-a-day put-potted a motor launch...followed by another ... and yet another. They anchored 20 yards away, ignoring my frantic, unattired gestures of rage, and from the boats emerged 25 men, women and children, ready for a day at the beach.

Back in my bathing suit, I suggested to them that there were no fewer than bundreds of pristine beaches on the islands. Why did they have to pick ours? It has good anchorage, they replied, and went their all-too-merry

We gut some sunning and swimming and snorkeling; the picnic lunch was tasty. But next time, I'll try for another, more deserted island beach.

The major common denominator of the two resorts, though, is the sense of space and-deserted beaches aside -privacy. The guest feels so very far from Stateside pressures; there is nothing untoward to disturb the even tenor of the days. At Little Dix, there are actually no locks on the doors of the a metal tube in no way resembles a well-tuned, cast, cup-shaped bronze

Mr. Head states: "Three bells sound in perfect unison for each note to produce a strong resonant note response. The tubular bell definitely is a more efficient design for the production of musical tone." This is nonsense, Rather, the hodge-podge of harmonics produced by striking a metal tube (tuned or not) makes it perpetually discordant and rules out concordant harmony altogether. The tubular instrument will tolerate only single-note melodies and even these sound strangely discordant. Many eminent composers of today (Vincent Persichetti, Easily Blackwood, Roy Hamlin Johnson, Henk Badings. etc.) have written music for the carilion. Nobody of significance, to my knowledge, has seen fit to compose for struck metal tubes (and it is a plty that orchestras resort to them for bell substitutes). Music for the two instruments is definitely not interchangeable. Only the carillon, as defined by The Guild of Carillonneurs in North America, can accommodate harmonic writing concordantly. MILFORD MYHRE

Lake Wales, Fig. To the Editor:

Al Head's reply to my letter cannot go unanswered. Bells have been in existence since before the time of Christ, and possibly as far back as 3000 B.C. The carillon came into existence in the 15th century. In light of these facts, it is preposterous to call something spring, gong, or some other piece of metal that produces a spurious sound. Likewise, it is absurd to call a set of any of these imitators a carillon.

THE NAZCA "IMAGES"

To the Editor: In reference to the article by Thomas Bridges entitled. "Ancient Peru: The Mysterious Images of the Nazca Plains" (Travel Section, Nov. 14), I think the author has scarcely bothered to track down some of the many important studies of Nazca culture and iconography. He chose instead to brush rudely past the Peruvian guard posted to protect the lines from the blundering tourist and to go in search of the resident German scientist at the site. It is precisely this sort of unthinking introsion that irrevocably blurs the markings and has forced the already tightly strapped Peruvian National Institute of Culture to put up viewing towers, fences and guards. But Mr. Bridges doesn't stop here. Citing the American Paul Kosok as the first scientist to study the lines, and invoking incompatible American Indian mythology to "interpret" the markings, he ignores the half-century of work done by Peruvians like Mejía Xesspe, whom he mentions in another context in the opening paragraph of

> JAMES M. VREELAND Research Associate Museo Nacional

The author replies: The fact is that Peruvions, not tourists, have caused the major damage to the Nazca markings. The Pan-American Highway and truck road to Cahuachi which sever several of the markings and the motorcycle tire tracks which scar many more are examples of their blunderings. On the question of Taribio Mejia Xesspe: It was my intent to evoke the excitement of Nazca as a travel destination, not to write an academic treatise on the history of native Nazca research.]

We were intrigued by the article on the Nazca "images" and hope that it will arouse interest in this amazing phenomenon. However, the accompanying "If you go . . ." box would lead one to assume that arrangements to visit the Nazca Plains must be made in Peru, since there was no indication that arrangements could be made in the States. #### MILWAUKER

I loved the article "What's Doing in Milwaukee" (Travel Section, Nov. 14). I'm a native Milwankean, who happens to live in the area filled with the architectural landmarks mentioned -Frank Lloyd Wright's Book House, Villa Terrace and the Water Tower. In fact, I live next door to the Book House, and gaze upon it fondly as I wash dishes.

The entire area is unique. Part of it sits on a bluff overlooking Lake Michigan, and it is filled with beautiful old houses. Many of the most interesting people in Milwaukee live within its boundaries. Through the years many of the homes have become multifamily dwellings but have retained their lovely facades, thereby keeping the substantial look of the neighbor-

Three years ago we were stunned, then aroused when St. Mary's Hospital, the eldest in the city and an integral part of the neighborhood, announced plans for expansion which included the acquisition of many of these wonderful old houses, and their eventual destruction. Now, three years later, we are still battling and are constantly on the alert. We have laid the groundwork necessary to achieve Historic Districting, hopefully, to ensure the preservation of our area.

An interesting phenomenon occurred with the formation of the Water Tower Landmark Trust. It was almost as though Suburbia had come to Urbia. We had meetings, parties, fund-raisings, rummage sales, found new friends and above all good neighbors. SAVE THE AMSTERDAM?

A new tourist site may be in the making in the Netherlands, and it involves the salvaging of a Dutch ship called the Amsterdam that sank off the coast of England some 200 years ago. To the cry of "Save the Amsterdam," Dutch promoters are currently trying to raise funds to recover the vessel and build a museum in Amsterdam harbor to accommodate the ship and her contents. The wreck has been lying off the coast of Hastings in southern England since 1749, and experts believe that recovery of the vessel would be of considerable interest to historians because of the excellent state of preservation of the artifacts on board, some of which have been recovered by divers. The vessel sank on her inaugural voyage to India with 335 persons aboard, and the wreckage is completely buried in sand. At low tide, however, the outline of the hull is visible from Hastings. In addition to the personal belongings of the passengers, thousands of bottles of wine are believed to be among the items that might be salvaged. The job is expected to cost the Dutch Government, which owns the vessel, an estimated $6.5 million.

but part of this would be offset by a fund drive now in progress. A jetty would be built on the site to remove 4,500 tons of sand, and the Amsterdam would then be enclosed in a protective concrete or steel "envelope" before being transferred to a huge container weighing 5,000 tons to be towed across the North Sea to Holland. Once the ship reaches the Netherlands, it is expected that the city of Amsterdam will donate land for a museum to house the vessel.

A look at the record is in order first. By far its most striking feature is the transition of the American economy from very little inflation on the average from very liftle inflation on the average to serious and seamingly almost incurable inflation—along with the problem of inflationary "expectations."

The 11 years from 1966 to 1976, inclusive, were not all "bad years." There was the "go-go" period in the stock market in 1968 when, despite Vietnam, optimism continued to prevail. There was good expansion, declining unemployment and only moderate inflation in 1972—the election year before the storm. But overall no one would dispute that it has been a bad patch.

It is often forgotten that in the period from 1958 to 1965 the price level in the United States rose on the average by less than 1.5 percent a year. Wages

and currency rates

posed unresolved

problems in 1976.

Inflation Confounded the Experts While the Jobless Rate Soared

rose about 3.5 percent. Some prices, particularly of services, went up, but others—such as many consumer durables—went down, and food prices were essentially stable.

Except for the mild recession of 1960of the economy was also expanding during this period, due partly to the breakthrough tax reduction of 1964 at a time when the hudget had a small deficit. It was tha heyday of the economists, with the advice of Walter W. Heller as Chairman of the Council of Economic Advisers playing a key role in the successful strategy of the Kennedy and early Johnson Administra-tions.

But then the bubble burst, starting with Vietnam. The following is the in-flation record since 1965, measured by in December of each year over December of the year previous:

1967-3.1 percent. 1970-5.5 percent. 1973-8.8 percent.

1974—12.2 percent 1975—7 percent. 1976--(est.) 5 percent.

As can be seen, things looked batter for a while during the period of price and wage controls. Speaking in late December 1972, Arthur F. Burns, the chairman of the Federal Reserve Board while warning against the continued danger of inflation—said, "The shock therapy applied by the President in the

About a month later, the great global explosion of prices that led the United States into dooble-digit inflation was gatting under way.

While there is continuing, though diminishing, debate about the manner and timing of the end of controls, bard-ly anyone claims that they could bave coped with such thiogs as world crop shortages, a boom in world raw material prices, the domestic effects of the devaluation of the dollar's international exchange rate and, a little later, the quadrupling of world oil prices.

The inflation rate now is a lot better a lot worse than it was for most of our history, including the bistory of the first 20 years after World War II.
It is the chiaf unhappy legacy left to Jimmy Carter, partly because its existence makes the unemployment problem more difficult to solve. While the inflation stands out as evidence of a time of troubles, the unhappy record goes beyond thet. Using any reasonable base periods, this last 11 years has shown these results:

QUnemployment has averaged higher. This is in part because of the changing composition of the labor force, with a higher portion of women and young persons, but it also reflects two reces-sions, the most recent of them the major developments involved changes in currency values in several leading nations as they went through adjust-ments related to internal inflationary conditions, the impact of high oil prices and their adverse trade performance. The British pound was thus in the spotlight throughout the year as it fell from the $2 level to a point below $1.60. The Italian lira was also weak; the Canadlan dollar fell below parity with the United States dollar for the first time in years; tha Mexican peso was devalued by almost 50 percent and was allowed to float for the first time in 22 years and, conversely, the Ger-

As a result, the leading nations placed particular emphasis on exports to aid their economies. Even though many nations turned more restrictive many nations turned more restrictive in their trade policies, world trade grew sharply—by 10 percent—to a new record above $1,000 billion. The United States economic picture, of course, was affected in various ways by tha trade and currency problems of its partners, as well as by the more pronounced slowing of so many West-ern economies. It was in this country's domestic economic picture, however, that some of the schizophrenic tenden-cies appeared.

In Britain, a Frustrating System

By PETER T. KILBORN

LEIGH-ON-SEA, England - Nicholas J. Cross runs a company here that makes a line of inflatable objects, notably lifejackets and rubber rafts. He doesn't know how to go about making the ona that he thinks the British economy could use today, ac, like a number of other British husinessmen, especially young unfettered ones, Mr. Cross wants out.

"I'm in the process of finding out what one does to move to the United States," he said. "Six weeks ago, I filed for an immigration visa, but they're not easy to get. I'm also looking at Canada, Australia and the Common Market countries."

Mr. Cross is unmarried and is only 29. He is managing director of Airborne Industries, a tiny company in this east coast seaside town. The company specializes in inflatable products for military markets-portable aircraft bangars, balloons for parachute training and dummy tanks, as well as lifeboats

The holding company that owns Airhome has also made Mr. Cross chief executive of three of its other four concerns, all small. It pays him $25,000, an unusually high salary here for a young executive, but British income taxes eat np $11,000 of the total.

Mr. Cross likes to take small troubled companies and turn them around. He thinks it is harder to do it in Britain than in other Western countries. He said he wants hig opportunities and big responsibilities and that he doesn't see either here.

"Success in this country has been ruled out," he said, "as has failure. Your chances of getting outside that narrow range between success and failure are very small. You can either decide to play the game or to play another game." From the perspective of three years in the remoter reaches of British industry, Mr. Cross has run up against many of the probems that are debated today at the highest levels of govarrament but that remain largely un-

If Mr. Cross wanted to borrow money to start, huy or expand his own company, be said, he would have to pay 17.5 percent interest. The reason is that he has to compete with the Government. Britain has to borrow so heavily to pay its debts, primarily because of beavy overspending for public services, that there's little left for anyone else. The industrial infrastructure surrounding Airborne is another obstruction. Strikes and production problems at supplier companies mean that ordars are delivered late. He said he is still awaiting delivery on one order placed more than a year ago.

He has difficulty as well, be said, buying more advanced materials from British industry, so he imports them from the United States and Germany. On the other aide, he said it was difficult to persuade customers to try new materials and new technologies Last winter, Mr. Cross set about getting local government permission to expand his plant. He expected it to take six months at most. The work, be thought, could be done in summer faster and less expensively than in winter. But the local planning authority took a year to decide, so the expansion of one small component of British industry, to which the government bas said it is giving top priority, was put off for six months. Mr. Cross takes issue with those critics of Britain who see the country at the brink of something bad. He thinks the country is stepping through one brink to another.

"We're now on the slope," he said.
"We're further away from a turning point than we were three years ago, when we had the miners' strike and the three-day week. There was a chance then that the country would take the difficult decision to pay itself only what it could afford to pay itself. What bappened? The people voted to bave their lights turned back on."

Mr. Cross's words look angry, but he speaks calmly and cautiously. He said he's more sorrowful than bitter. And his words are hardly those of a passing dissident. He merely echoes views heard everywhere among British businessmen working in promising yet struggling companies.

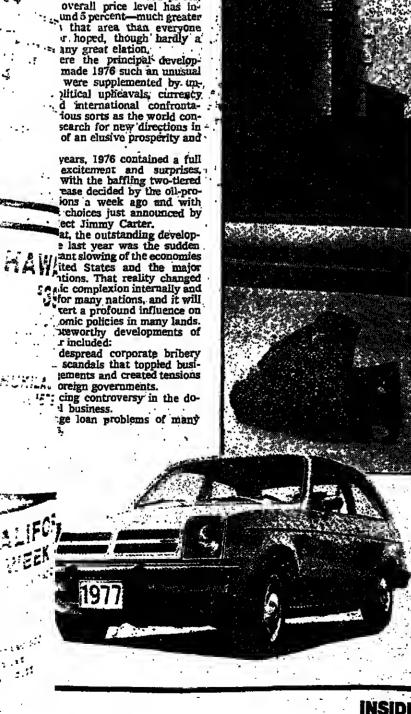

In mid-December, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, Denis Healey, an-nnunced a package of public spending reductions and other measures to reduce the country's budget deficit. But it was little different from several simi-lar programs announced earlier, none of which has made much of a dent rehabilitating the economy.

"The significance of Healey's announcement," Mr. Cross said, "is that it is of no significance. It's a big missed opportunity. It certainly isn't a turning

British industry disrupts Mr. Cross's personal life now and then. He wanted to trade in his Lotus Elan sports car, a company perk for a new Rover 3500, a racy sedan that British Leyland introduced last summer with the promotional line, "Tomorrow's Car Today." "I wanted one with manual transmission and electric windows," be said. Both options are normally common on Rovers. He also wanted one painted silver-gray, a color shown in the advertising brofheir assembly lines and adopting the technology to match.

Takashi Shibasaki of Hitachi Ltd., one of the biggest consumer electronics makers, says: "All of that costs exorbitant sums; which maller producers don't have. What we will be seeing from now on is a rapid changeover to concentration on higher-quality products demanded by the new regulations."

By the time demand is expected to pick up again next summer, many of the smaller Japanese companies may the smaller Japanese companies may already have been squeezed out, leaving large Japanese transceiver producers and consumer electronics makers to supply an estimeted 10 million to 12 million units yearly for the medium term. But Mr. Shibasaki adds: "What we're worried about now is intensifying competition from newcomers to the field both in Jepan and the United States."

Practically all producers now rely on sales contracts with American importers. But the fear is that companies like Matsushita Electric, which sells carradios and stereo equipment under the Panasonic lahel in the United States, will leave them in the dust by pumping transceivers throogh their own well-developed marketing networks. The industry also expects American producers, particularly General Electric and Motorola, to wage an aggressive campaign to challenge Japanese domination of the market.

paign to challenge Japanese domination of the market.

Another uncertainty haunting Japanese manufacturers is that the C.B. will eventually go the way of all feds. "What we want to know is to just what extent transceivers are real essentials or simply playthings," says Mr. Shibasaki. Until they find out, consumer electronics producers like Hitachi are likely to stick with more time-tested products. At Cybernet plans are currently under way to reduce the firm's almost total dependence on transceiver export sales by diversifying into carradios and stereo tape decks.

At the Cybernet plant, Yasuko Hosa.

At the Cybernet plant, Yasuko Hosa-ka solders integrated circuit boards into the latest 40-channel models as they move down the assembly line at 30-second intervals. "Tve read all eboot the CB boom in the newspapers," she says, "but I can't for the life of me figure out why the Americans are so crazy about them."

To Mr. Tomonoh, however, the answer is as clear as the difference be-tween East and West: 'Traditionally, the Japanese have the idea that com-munication kills culture. This, of course, is changing, but silence is still a great virtue. But the Americans have to talk to reach some kind of consensus. It's the basis of their society."

Even so, what about the prospect for the C.B. fad to spread to Japanese. consumers? "Unfortunately, there is absolutely none," he laughs. "Japan is a crowded country and our Govern-ment would never permit us to use such things." But Mr. Tomonoh is con-vinced that the Americans will never outgrow their need to commun

Mr. Doley believes that New Orleans would have more black finan-cial leaders if the city historically had been more sterrily segregated, in the manner of

he said. "But, looking back, I wish New

Whatever the private force that propels Mr. Doley, he is moving relentlessly forward. He borrowed money from the Federal Small Business Administration and two New Orleans banks—one white, one black—to buy his $90,000 stock exchange seat in 1973. He has oot finished repaying the loan, but he is doing well, he says. He expects his firm to gross more than $200,000 this year.

The late Frank McGee asked him on the NBC "Today" show three years ago whether be expected to be a millionaire by the age of 30. Mr. Doley recalls that he replied, "Hopefully." "I'm 29 now and I'll be 30 in four ly to follow social and political trends (he is a Republican). He works in community affairs that vary from the board of the local public television station to part-time teaching at predominantly black Southern University. He has even dared to ruffle some white associates by filing a racial discrimination complaint against a whiteowned brokerage firm here for which he once worked.

The New York operation that Mr. Doley and the two other black brokers are considering would not be in Harlem but in the financial district, at .32 Broadway. Pending stock exchange approval, Doley Securities will merge with the Willie Daniels Group, which is now a division of Neuberger Securities. Mr. Doley said he would be chairman of the new firm—Doley, Daniels and Cartwright—and Willie L. Daniels, an experienced black broker who heads the Daniels Group, would be president and chief operating officer. James Cartwright, another black broker, would be executive

The floor officer would be James Kelly a white broker who has been handling floor trading for Mr. Doley for some time. Mr. Kelly intored Mr. Doley in New York after the young man bought his stock exchange seat. Mr. Doley worked as an independent broker there for nine months. He uses Bache for clearing. He envisions opening branches in several cities with large black populations-Chicago, Washington, Atlanta, Detroit and Los Angeles—possibly by using the facilities of established securities firms, as he does in New Orleans.

He describes Doley Securities as "probably the smallest member firm on the New York Stock Exchange." It is not a distinction he intends to keep. "I don't look at my firm as a minority firm," ba said, "but as a member firm on the New York Stock Exchange whose president and owner happens to be black. I'm sure my clients don't do business with me based on the color of my skin but because we provide proper services. Many of my clients are serviced by Goldman, Sachs and Salomon Brothers and the like. I'm in some very stiff compe-

Mr. Doley does much of his own research for clients. In addition, he has access to the research of Bache "within certain guidelines." Adding the Daniels Group will give the oew firm a unique research capability, he said. Mr. Daniels specializes to research on Africa; providing earnings and market information on multinational companies that do business in Africa.

The Daniels Group is an offshoot of the first black-owned member firm of the New York Stock Exchange—Daniels & Bell Inc., which joined the exchange on June 24, 1971. Willie Daniels, then its president, became an active spokesman for blacks in the financial community, and the firm achieved considerable prominence as a result.

Earlier this year, Mr. Daniels left Daniels & Bell and set up the Daniels Group at Neuberger Securities, which will have no rela-tionship to the new Doley, Daniels & Cart-wright. Mr. Daniels said last week that his research would focus on Third World investment opportunities.

"The new security analysis must involve a more serious understanding of foreign politics, sociology, psychology and eco-nomics in order to formulate an opinion on corporations which derive a significant portion of their earnings from global inestments," he said.

Mr. Daniels noted that he had just com-pletted a 90-day study, 'Oil in Africa and United States Corporate Involvement," and that his analysts are at work on another report, "Mineral Resources of Southern Africa and United States Corporate Involve-ment," which will be published within the next month.

The merger of the Daniels Group and Doley Securities will leave three Big Board member firms that are black-controlled: First Harlem Securities, which became an exchange member in September 1971, Daniels & Bell and the part Doley Pariel. iels & Bell, and the new Doley, Daniels and Cartweight, which expects to receive exchange approval for its merged structure within the next two weeks. Harold Doley will continue to clear transactions originat-ing in his New Orleans office through Bache, while the New York office will clear through Drysdale Securities.

Mr. Cartwright, the third name in the new firm, worked at First Harlem Securities, Shearson Hammill & Company and in the New York regional office of the Secu-rities and Exchange Commission before joining the Daniels Group. He has a degree in international law from Oxford University in England and is now an institutional brokerage specialist.

Contrary to some preconceptions, the black-controlled investment houses do not focus their sales efforts entirely on the black community, although they do have ready access to many black-oriented institutions. They seek clients from all walks of life and try to compete with other brokerage firms on the basis of their research as well as their expertise in executing transactions.

Mr. Doley said his execution capabilities were "excellent." For clients who want to buy, he said, he "bird-dogs" the large-inventory securities firms like Merrill Lynch. For selling, he has access to the information of his own floor officer, Mr. Kelly, and that of his clearing correspondent, the

Mr. Doley believes the giants of American business are missing a bet with the black minority. United States blacks produce more wealth than Canada's gross netional product, he said, but black-owned business continues to falter and blacks are conspicuously under-represented on corporate boards.

"Let's have some blacks on the boards of these big corporations," he said. "Big concerns are making a mistake in not having greater input from blacks from the He thraed away from his video screen and began musing on a matter that obviously had occupied his thoughts. "Look at the blue bloods of this country." he said. "The Harrimans, the Morgans all of them have their names on the doors of Wall Street investment houses. That's where they got their start. They make up a cohesive, powerful group. "And so far that group has not been tapped," he said, with a gleam in his eye. "I aim to penetrate."

sists stubbornly in the 5 to 6 percent range despite high unemployment and a fair amount of slack in the economy's capacity to produce.

There is a longstanding, historical correlation between the rate of in-

The cash position of banks, consumers and corporations is better now than in the last few years.

6.5 percent nationwide in the last 12 months, they are still rising a good deal faster than productivity. Also on the inflation front, Mr. Carter inherits the fruits of a prolonged period of sluggishness in husicess investment in new plant and equipment, partly a result of the "time of troubles." Put. simply, expansion of demand might quickly run into a bottleneck in such industries as steel and paper because capacity could prove inadequate. Some economists argue that the nation will reach the limits of its manufacturing capacity, at least in the short run, well before anything like full employment can be achieved.

but on the more hopeful side, there is every reason to take some cheer in the fact that consumer prices in the last three months have been going up at annual rates of only 4.3 percent. The economy-wide wage increase has been drifting lower for two years in a row, and this is true of union-bargained wage increases as well, though they are larger than the average for the whole economy. A good farm crop is in hand, and there are no signs of a new surge

Mr. Carter also inheris the highest unemployment rate since Franklin D. Roosevelt took the office of the Presidency. Perhaps most serious of all, he inherits the sense of malaise, of lack of confidance in Government economic policy, of cynicism about inflation, that policy, of cynicism about inflation, that is now so pervasive.

And yet, with some luck and reasonable management of Government policy, most economists would agree that the next four years could be fairly good. Nearly all of tha forecasts see expansion of ontput in 1977 and most of them look for a good 1978 as well, partly hecause the 1976 "pause" has added to the probable duration of the expansion. There are now no major external forces—apart from the recent fairly small iocrease in world oil prices— operating to push up the United States price level. There is no "credit crunch" and none in sight, and interest rates are well below their peaks.

Perhaps most important of all, the "liquidity" — meaning essentially the ready-cash position — of banks, corporate business and consumers is better now than it has been for several years, which was one useful fruit of the sear-ing reassing.

It may be that things can never be as good again as they were in the early 1960's, particularly on the inflation front. Economists will probably never again reach their pedestals of that time. But it is at least possible that confi-dence in this vast economy, and in the Government's influence on it, will slowly be repaired.

Capital Spending: Too Risky?

A Corporation Retains Control Of Just 10c on A Profit Dollar

By PETER L BERNSTEIN

Nineteen seventy-six was a great year for profits but a disappointing one for capital spending. Next year prom-ises to have much the same flavor. Even if we look out as far as 1980, the obstacles to a capital spending boom may persist. Why? And what, if anything, can we do about it? The problem is a two-sided one.

On the one hand, while profits are big, they are not big enough—particu-tarly if we look at how little business has left over after paying taxes to the government and divideods to stock-holders. That means either that taxes and dividends take too large a share of the pie or that costs are too high and prices are too low.

On the other hand, the costs and risks of capacity expansion are much greater than they were in the past. The number of dollars needed to increase capacity by one percentage point has about doubled over the past seven or eight years, No fancy statistical analysis is needed ed to grasp the essence of the problem.

Take profits. Here, 1976 appears to have been a bonanza. Domestic profits before taxes as reported by nonfinan-cial corporations (which account for about 85 percent of the total) will amount to some $127 billion this year, more than 35 percent above last year, 30 percent above the previous peak in 1974, and double the peak before that, in 1968.

Unfortunately, that is the beginning rather than the end of the story. The $127 billion figure is inaccurate, because it underestimates by about $28 billion the cost of replacing the inventories and fixed assets used up in this year's productive process and booked at original cost—this is the estimated amount by which conventional bookkeeping fails to reflect inflation. After this adjustment, the $127 billion will shrink to just under $100 billion, which will be available to pay taxes, distrib-ute dividends, and finance corporate

Well, $100 billion is still a large amount by the standards of the past. It is about 40 percent above 1975, 70 percent above 1974 (a year when the inflation adjustments were particularly fierce), and 40 percent above 1968. But have to provide for the "senior now we have to provide for the "senior partner"—the United States Treasury, which levies taxes on the basis of profits as reported, not as adjusted for inflation. After an estimated $54 billion for taxes, only $45 billion will remain.

Taxes. $54 billion $13 billion What is Left For Reinvestment

1976 Profita of All Nonfinancial Corporations-$127 billion

The "junior partner"—the stockholder—now comes in for his share, which will amount to $32 billion.

Consequently, the massive $127 bil-llon with which we started has succumbed to three gigantic sices totaling 10 cents on the dollar—will remain to $114 billion. Just $13 billion—a mere finance the future growth of these companies. While this is a significant improvement over the disastrous performance of 1974 and 1975, it is no larger than the sums reinvested during 1972 or 1973 and well below the annual average of $21 billion recorded during the years 1965-68. The lack of growth in retained earnlngs, after the inflation adjustments, explains why businessmen complain so volubly and press to raise their prices even though this year's profits seem so huge at first glance.

Gross revenues have about doubled over the past 10 years; and in Just the past two years, have risen nearly 25 percent. These companies have also ex-(mostly plant and equipment) by 30 percent in physical terms since the late 1960's; the current replacement cost of the fixed assets on their books today would exceed $1.8 trillion, which happens to be double the replacement value of fixed assets on their books as recently as 1970.

Next to these kinds of numbers, the flow of net earnings available to fi-nance expansion is only a dismal trickle. Admittedly, reinvested profits are not the only source of internal finance. Depreclation charges, to reflect the costs of fixed assets used up in current production, represent a return of cash previously laid out and are also available to finance capital spending. In 1976, these sums will amount to about $106 billion. Yet, because of inflation, this is inadequate even to replace the fixed assets used up in current produc-tion, much less to finance a net in-crease in productive capacity.

One can also try to put a more cheerful face on these figures by pointing out that many companies are still operating well below their preferred maximum operating rates—if we can just stimulate demand, output will rise and profit levels will consequently be much higher than they are now.

That is undoubtedly true. If this country really does reach a level of, say, only 5 percent unemployment by 1980, pretax profits of nonfinancial corporations in that year, after inflation adjustments, could easily be double their current level. This happy result, in fact, is achievable with reasonable and moderate assumptions—productivity improvement only a little above long-term trends, wage gams in the 6 to 7 percent area, and price inflation

Remember, though, that these earnings will still be significantly diminished in absolute amounts unless tax rates are reduced or dividends rise more slowly than net earnings (or both).

more slowly than net earnings (or both).

Most important, colossal sums will be necessary to cover the costs of the capital equipment that must be installed if in fact output is going to grow fast enough to create all the jobs we want to create by 1980. My own calculations, admittedly rough, suggest that plant and equipment expenditures by nonfinancial corporations will have to average nearly $160 billion a year over the four years 1977-80 if the nation is to have sufficient capacity for output to reach full employment levels. output to reach full employment levels (meaning about 5 percent unemploy-ment) in 1980. This compares with an estimated $125 billion in 1976 and an annual average of $110 billion for the five years ending this year.

Compared with an improving level of profits and large sums from depration allowances, $160 billion a may loom large, but is still a feat goal. The real question is whether businessman will find the potential wards from that level of spending mensurate to the inevitable risks. mensurate to the inevitable risks. answer depends upon an odd elem in the present situation. Most comproductive capacity to expand the output by about 2 percent a year another three or four years with increasing theft capacity at all, if would just have to replace assets wear out. Consequently, the amount capital spending required to any say, 3 percent a year growth in our is substantially more than the replace is substantially more than the repliment level of spending required to port slower rates of growth. He each percentage point per amun growth means a big difference in necessary amount of capital spend

While capital spending require support a full employment level of put in 1980 would be $160 billion year, then, the amount required to port just, one percentage point amuen less of growth would ave about $110 billion, or a total sand $200 billion over the four years.

Meanwhile, although profits we also grow more slowly, the differ would be relatively slight. Assum one percentage point slower growt output and an inflation rate of. 4 percent instead of 4.5 percent leaving other assumptions intact-total flow of profits from 1976 to would be within 85 percent of the iter growth case. Indeed, after taxes dividends: at current rates, the a lute number of dollars retained du 1977-80 would show a negligible div ence—perhaps $9 or $10 billion a gether. This pales before the differ in capital expenditures.

Of course, the calculations underlie these findings are conject. The trouble is that even some v variations in the assumptions leave basic dilemma intact: faster grow output provides too little additiprofitability (given the tax and to dend ratios) to justify the big dit ence in capital spending. The busin man may well decide to use his tained profits to reduce his risks rat than to intensify them—that is, to prove the liquidity of his company r er than to pour money into bricks a mortar. The difference in potential wards hardly seems proportionate the difference in risks.

Clearly something is some to h output provides too little additi

the difference in risks.

Clearly, something is going to h to give way expectations of full ployment, tax collections from corpotions, dividends to stockholders, rate of wage increases, and even ho for a manageable rate of inflationserious trouble lies ahead.

Let the Market Decide on Steel Prices

Increases Have Not Been Able To Offset Rising Costs

On Nov. 29, several major steel comon Nov. 29, several major steel com-panies announced increases on certain of their products. The following was adopted from an explanatory article by Lewis W. Foy, chairman of the Bethle-hem Steel Corporation, which appeared in the December edition of The Bethle-hem Pariew.

By LEWIS W. FOY

A lot of questions have been raised by government officials, the press, members of the public, and fellow Bethlehem employees about our amounced 6 percent price increase on some sheet steel products, following similar increases by other companies

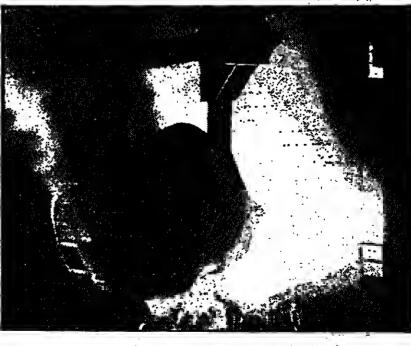

Most people don't seem to realize that this price increase applies only to hot-aod cold-rolled sheet and strip products and cootinuous weld pipe— which account for less than one-third of Bethlehem's shipments of steel mill products in an average year.

One of the questions we've been asked is whether the market will auport these price increases at this time.

There's only one way to find out, and that's by letting the market decide wbether we're talking about steel, cement, automobiles, or chewing gum. My own opinion Is that tha market support the new prices. In our case, the new sheet price went into effect on Dec. 1. It's in place and is being respected. Our customers are placing orders on the new basis. The demand for sheet products bas strengthened since September, when we re-scinded a previously announced price increase. Customers were reducing their inventories in September and the requirements for sheet steel began a brief decline. It bottomed out in Octo-ber. Business picked up somewhat in November, and we expect it to continue improving in the first quarter of 1977. I want to emphasize that, although demand for a lot of other steel products demand for a lot of other steel products has been weak, the demand for sheet steel products has been fairly strong throughout most of 1976 and sheet sales in 1977 should show a moderate increase over 1976. The fact that we have been operating at less than full capacity this year bas been caused primarily by the lack of demand for other products, such as plates and structural shapes. Those products are mainly used in construction and in manufacturing heavy industrial goods, and both of those markets have been depressed.

'Steel companies are earning less than all manufacturing companies on average.'

Some people say that we decided to increase eheet and strip prices out of fear of a future price freeze. The fact is that we didn't then and do not now expect wage and price controls to be imposed. Our action was taken because of the need to partially recover to creases in production costs for the products. In our judgment the mark is strong enough to accept these it

I don't think there's any question I don't think there's any questic that the new prices for sheet and strare badly needed to offset increase costs and poor profitability. Willia Lilley III, acting director of the Count on Wage and Price Stability, it conceded that the steel companies, is cluding Bethlebem, are earning let than all manufacturing companies the average. He has also acknowledge that our price increases in the last fe years have not been large enough cover increases in costs. For the firmine months of 1976, for example, Bethlehem's net income dropped 23 per lehem's net income dropped 23 per cent from the same period of 1975 at amounted to only 3.2 percent of or

The whole American economy he a big stake in the health of the steendustry. We pay taxes, employ a k of people, support many other bus nesses and industries, and, most important of all, we make vitally needs products.

In order to keep on doing this, and do it even better, we're working of a $1.8 billion capital improvement program that will extend through 1972. This program will enable us to replace and maintain existing equipment an add approximately 2.5 million tons of raw steelmaking capacity. Expenditures just to meet existing pollution control regulations are expected to cos $600 million over the next five years—over and above the $400 million we've already poured ioto environmental protection facilities, and the $50 million a year we're now spending to oper ate and maintain those installations.

We can't do all this without money Our constant objective must be it maintain the reasonable level o profitability that's essential in order t maintain and moderately expand on productive facilities, to meet the heave demands of environmental and social costs, and to fulfill our obligations as managers of the business.

The problem, he said, is that this kind of disclosure would put unfair pressure on other activists. "If Nader does it, why shouldn't you?" would be the charge, he declared. "But they have their right to privacy, newspaper pub-lishers have it—and so do we."

In addition, Mr. Nader said, there is a strategic element in refusion to disclose the use to which he puts his-resources, "When I put my money in projects, say like $10,000 in Alaska, I don't want them (his opponents) to know how thin we're spread. Then they could just slap a suit on us and tie us up," he noted. As for his portfolio, Mr. Nader said it is entirely in the hands of a brokerwhom he would not identify—and was "not very exciting." He said he knew the names of the stocks he held only because they must be reported on his income tax returns. He also holds Treasury securities and bank certificates of deposit, the consumer advocate disclosed.

Overall, the portfolio apparently has proved to be something of a lemon. Mr. Nader said: "It's done very bad— I'm thinking of putting all of it in Gov-

Taxing Philanthropy

The new tax law passed by Congress this year closed some tax loopholes and made some other changes, but it left one area virtually untouched: giving.

"The tax reform act of 1976 will barely affect any charity in any way, says John J. Schwartz, president of the American Association of Fund-Raising Counsel in New York. The upshot of the new law, according to Mr. Schwartz, is that a person may still leave a part of his or her wealth to charity "and have the taxable portion of his estate reduced by the amount. of his estate reduced by the amount of the contribution."

Mr. Schwartz said this should sound familiar because the new law incor-porates most of the recommendations of the Commission on Private Philanthropy and Public Needs, which spent $2 million between 1973 and 1975 on a study concluding that the present system of tax breaks in return for charitable commoutions should be continued. "The Congress saw fit to pre-serve the proven incentives to give," ex-plains Mr. Schwartz.

There are, of course, some new twists in the labyrinthine tax code that could affect private philanthropy. For one, Mr. Schwartz cites the dec tax inherited property on the besis of its appreciation from the original cost or the market value on Dec. 31, 1976, whichever is larger. More people may give to charity, Mr. Schwartz feels, to offset the bigger tax bite on appreci-ation. On the other hand, the new law extends the basic 50 percent maximum tax to cover pension and annuary in-comes, which might allow some folks, according to Mr. Schwartz, to skip a few charitable donations.

The tax reform act also spells out some specifics on the payous required of private organizations such as the Ford Foundation. Those organizations now need disperse only a flat 5 percent of their asset value a year, instead of the 6 percent a year—subject to adjustments based on economic indices—that the old law required. Row-ever, on the encouraging side for po-tential reciplents, Mr. Schwartz notes, "private foundations will be better able to plan their giving."

Corporate giving won't change much either, says Mr. Schwartz, noting that "the real barometer of corporate philanthropy is corporate profits." Even a bill that would have increased the charitable deduction for corporations to 10 percent of taxable income (which died in the 94th Congress) wouldn't have done much to loosen corporate purse strings. Year in and year out, says Mr. Schwartz, corporations give about 0.9 percent of their profits.

edlining

in "Redlining as an Investment ategy" (Dec. 12) concern is exessed that bank trust departments concentrating their common stock restments in a small group of large mpanies and excluding the equities of any excellent smaller companies. The owth of index funds is mentioned as idence of this possibly dangerous velopment.

However it would be our view that dex funds are clear evidence of a end precisely opposite to the one ared—toward diversification, rather an concentration. The essential goal index funds is diversification over list of several hundred stocks (in notrast to a bank's normal "buy list" f 50 to 100), in order to reflect the ntire stock market.

Banks and other investment advisors ave little choice but to respond to the hallenge. Some already are by jumping in the index fund bandwagon. Broader liversification is definitely the wave of ture. JAN. M. TWARDOWSKI The First Index Investment Trust Valley Forge, Pa., Dec. 17, 1976

Free Trade

To the Financial Editor:

In "Steel Renews War on Imports"
(Nov. 28) R. Heath Larry, vice chairman of United States Steel, is quoted as saying: "We need to know what kind of trade policy the United States intends to embrace in the years ahead, perticularly in regard to steel. A lot of investment decisions will hang in the balance." Mr. Larry is absolutely right. The industry needs to know. The Carter Administration should quickly and clearly call them. What the message should be, however, is that there will be no restrictions, unilateral or negotiated, or legitimate trade except in fully door-mented emergency situations and only as a marginal part of coherent constructive, carefully monitored adjustment aid to alling industries whose real problems and needs have been careful-

In other words, no steel trade conwhose necessity and whose cost to the country are fully explained to the American people, and whose effect on our economy is kept under close government scrutiny.

Fine Furry Mix-Up

To the Financial Editor:

In the excellent article "Furs Ride High on Fashion". (Nov. 21) about the heightened level of fur sales in the United States in 1976, I was quoted as referring to an incident which took place here years ago (when mink was a rarity) when a distinguished American playments at the control of the con can playwright was so excited about acquiring her first mink coat that she went to the cast party celebrating the opening of her new play directly from the store with a bunch of her new pelts over her shoulder. I associated the event with Lillian Helman.

It actually happened to Bella Spewack, the co-author with the late Sam Spewack of "Boy Meets Girl" and "Kiss Me Kate." Mrs. Spewack, a great humorist and herself a colorful person, recalls that the coat had to be designed and made for her so the handful of pelts was her way of immediately conveying her pleasure and excitement to her associates.

Miss Hellman's mink coat was acquired at Bergdorf's in the more traditional way. I am glad to put our playwrights

Arbitrated Bulbs

To the Financial Editor:

Most people, including unionized workers and their leaders, would agree workers and their leaders, would agree that "efficiency" dictates that the machinests must replace light bulbs on their machines. ("The Light Bulbs Go to Arbitration" Dec. 12).

Everyone is worse off when total output declines because machinists stay their hand and wait on maintenance electricians to do a job within the competence of both groups — everything else being equal. But "everything else" is not equal.

If five workers can achieve the output of seven over the same period of time, at a constant rate of pay, it is obviously maximally "efficient" to al-low them to do so. But what is to become of those two workers? They bear the substantial human cost of unemployment, unless all seven workers are willing to work for a lesser wage or increase their output proportionately over the same period of time with no increase in the rate of pay.

Who gains? The consumer? Maybe, although recent experience indi-cates that as unit and aggregate labor costs decline, prices remain constant or increase. Thus, "efficiency" means a transfer of wealth to owners from workers. Whether this is desirable (and whether a transfer to some consumers from some workers is also desirable) is a normative question which cannot be resolved by reference to the concept of quantitative "efficiency."

The sharp decline in business activity was clearly a nightmare of the past as 1976 moved along, and yet, in a recent poil, a high percentaga of the respondents indicated they still believed the United States was mired in a recession. At the same time it was reported that the number of poor persons in the country had increased by 2.5 million in 1975, when the current recovery was starting.

The highly erratic course of events over the last 12 months emphasized again the difficulties of the forecasters and reminded one of the philosophic missings of a leading Jepanese economist last October: Nobutana Kiuchi, who heads the Institute of the World Economy, told a group of businessmen

"It is important not to adhere too strongly to any forecast in view of tha fact that the world always turns out to be a series of unexpected happenings." One American analyst who was right a year ago was Walter E. Hoadley, senior economist for the Bank of America; when he commented:

That's exactly the kind of year that 1976 has been. Its one saving grace is the fact that it is ending on an upbeat that promises to grow stronger as its own economic momentum builds. The promise of some nump-priming from the new Carter Administration should add to the momentum.

OHN V.N. KLEIN was attending a meeting the other day at the Stony Brook campus, and while the assembled political cademic figures were waiting for eople from cable television to set eir equipment so the meeting begin, someone asked the Suffolk ty Executive how his campaign ).C.S." was going.

The Suffolk County Legislature has alreedy authorized Mr. Klein to institute a suit against the planned willing in the Georges Bank off Massachusetts. As it now stands, the drilling plan would have the oil pumped into tankers for shipment to refineries in New Jersey, and Mr. Klein is concerned about the likelihood—as high as 90 percent, according to a study he commissioned -that any oil spilled from the tankers would wash up on Suffolk's delicate.

Mr. Klein's antidrilling position became the policy of Suffolk County and the lawsuit was joined shortly afterward by Nassau County and Governor Carey. But what was once a united front has now begun to crack-first when Governor Carey, bowing to economic-development pressures, backed out of the suit, later when Ralph G.

eyes glitter. He has removed his mauve-colored suit jacket, display-ing his tight-fitting vest and bold-colored shirtsleeves. The couple are engaged in the intricate steps of the hustle, dancing in a disco that is as finely groomed and manicured as they are.

Discothèques are not new to the Island. There were discothèques here even before there was disco music. Years ago, the rustic-looking hars and pubs that were frequented by young singles sprouted dance floors, bandstands and control rooms for light and sound. They set a minimum age of 21 for admission and put up signs saying "No dungarees."

But in the last few months a new letter of discotheque has opered on the Island. These are discos that are built and conceived around a dance floor rather than around a bar. They are places where dungarees are unheard of, jackets are required and the minimum age is 23 or 25. Places where there is suede on the walls, mirrors on the ceilings and parquet underfoot. And there are no live bands, because the center-of attraction is the people—the way they look, the way they dance, the

"The people are the show," said Ian Schrager, a disco entrepreneur who has invested in clubs in Manhattan and Queens and expects to open a place soon called After Dark in Oakdale.

Is the Island ready for the chic Manhattan-type nightspot? The owners of Chaz in Huntington and the Decameron in Levittown think so, and have put hundreds of thousands of dollars behind that hunch. But the owners and devotees of the pub-type discos say that the glamour and glitter will soon fade, because the Island is not and does not want to be the city.

"We decided to open a place that was nicer than anything the city had to offer, a place that would make people from the city want to come here. We decided it must be something completely different, more

Holiday Card Game

APPY holidays and please don't bother me. It's the morning after Christmas and I'm rushing to get out all those cards to people who beat us to the punch. I mean they sent us cards and we didn't send them any. That means we have to hurry and get ona back to them in time.

In time. That means by New Year's Day. For some reason it is all right if you acknowledge late holiday greetings with a Happy New Year card. You must get it there by New Year's Day or I don't know what will happen. Very likely those people will strike you from their Christmas list. Well, there are Worse fates.

So here it is Sunday, the day after Santa Claus, and we are frantically filling out cards to those lovely people, what's their name again—can you read the hand will on the card—we met in New England last season. As they say, we really must get together soon. But they live over in Boondock, I think that's the place, maybe Boonton, N.J., and I wasn't happy to cultivate new friends who live two rivers (and tolls) away from the Island. So wish them Happy New Year and let it go at that. Then there is the holiday greeting that just came in signed Leo and Fran. Some handwriting! Who are they? Could it be Gwen and Stan? No matter, it just came in late last week and we'll send it out to "Dear folks,"

This catch-up holiday routine comes around every year, yet somehow we are never quite prepared for it. We send out our usual list, not a big one but one that seems to cover almost everyone with whom we exchange cards. Our cards are quite neutral and can cover Hanukkah and Christmas, ajthough if friends have strong leanings one way or another we are also geared

It is the unexpected that cause the trouble. They never come in early; always just under the wire. Is this calculated? Are they trying to show us up? No matter. There is always Happy

New Year when we can get even. The crush of mail has been posing so many problems, not only in one house, but in almost everyone's house. Some people have kicked the card Continued on Page 13

Hello, Mr. Chips

By LAWRENCE VAN GELDER

HE Dalton High School's loss is Woodmere Academy's gain. Come next July, Peter M. Branch, who has spent the last four years as director of the Dalton High School in Manhattan, will become Woodmere's headmaster. The 33-year-old Mr. Branch, who lives now in Dobbs Ferry, will be moving into a house a mile from the academy with his wife, Susan, his son, 5, his daughter, 3, and — if all goes according to schedule — another Branch of the family tree, too.

In the case of Harry Weiner, you can forget about academicians being far removed from the storm and strife of real life. Mr. Weiner, who is acting dean of the W. Averell Haltiman College for Urban and Policy Sciences at the State University at Stony Brook, has been commuting to Washington as a member of President-elect Jimmy Carter's transition team. In the capital, he has been helping the incoming administration grapple with the complexities of the Department of Health, Education and Welfare. Back at Stony Brook, one student said: "Dean Weiner has been lecturing to us on how we should be skeptical about what can be accomplished by government reorganization. Now that he is helping in the reorganization, he is a lot more optimistic. That's how professors are, I guess."

Anyone who likes the offbeat names of small publishing outfits is going to have to admire this one: FullCourt Press, of Great Neck. That's the publisher of "The Worm Grows Fat," Herbert Waxman's book of poetry and art. Mr. Waxman, with his poems and paintings, helies the image of the accountant as a man wrapped up in the certainty of numbers. Why do some accountants write poetry? Mr. Waxman, who lives io Great Neck, deals with that in his first poem: It's an arrangement of a section of the Internal Revenue Gode.

A couple of local boys are coming home Tuesday night—by way of Uppsala, 5weden. They'll be on view in the Sonthampton College gym, where the Southampton College Colonials will be squaring off in a free exhibition game against the KFUM Uppsala Basketball Team from Uppsala, Swedeo. The co-captain of the pro team from overseas is Neal Meachum, a 1974 graduate of Southamptoo who was selected Long Island's "most valuable player" in his senior year and was named to the All Long Island Basketball Team for three years. In addition to playing on the Swedish team, he helps teach hasketball to the country's youngsteys. Coaching the squad while on leave from Brooklyn College is Rudy D'Amico, formerly of Long Island University.

Philip F. Corso, the former Suffolk County Sheriff who resigned after being convicted of a misdemeanor charge involving political fund-raising, has joined the Security Guard Corporation of Bellmore. He is vice president in charge of Suffolk County operations, working out of Smithtown.

Maneuverings Behind a Feud

By Frank Lynn

ow that the entry list is presumably complete in the contest for the Republican nomination for Nassau County Executive, it is evident that the maneuvering that led up to the three-way race was very much like a poker game complete with binfling, signals and high stakes.

The scenario was put together in interviews with the three Republican candidates for County Executive—Ralph G. Caso, the incumbent; Francis T. Purcell, Presiding Supervisor of the Town of Hempstead; and State Senator John R. Dunne—as well as top aides of the dealer in the game, Joseph M. Marglotta, the Nassan County G.O.P. chairman.

It began as long as a year ago, when Mr. Margiotta tried to persuade Mr. Purcell to be the County Executive candidate. Mr. Margiotta had had policy and persocality differences with Mr. Caso and also was concerned that, like District Attorney William Cahn in 1974, Mr. Caso was in danger of losing his post, which with its patronage and contracts is vital to the health of the Nassau Republican organization.

Mr. Purcell resisted and eventually reinforced his private statement with a public announcement that he was not even going to seek re-election as Presiding Supervisor. He had several lucrative offers from private industry and was entitled to a pension of more than $20,000 a year. "Twe put in a lot of years; I would like to retire while I'm still a young man," said the 57-year-old Mr. Purcell.

Mr. Margiotta then turned to Mr. Dunne, who is considered something of a political maverick and as a result has never heeo close to the county Republican chairman. At one point, indeed, Mr. Margiotta even barred Mr. Dunne from meetings of the Nassau legislative delegation, Yet he has been a formidable vote-getter.

All sides agree that Mr. Margiotta did not make a flat commitment to Mr. Dunne. "I can't say Joe went back on his word, but he had certainly eocouraged me greatly," said Mr. Dunne at his law office in a building opposite the county government center in Mineola.

But there were certainly signals of Mr. Margiotta's views—Mr. Margiotta and Mr. Dunne were seen together at political affairs in the spring and summer and Mr. Dunne golfed with some of Mr. Margiotta's top political lieutenants.

There was an apparent shift after Election Day, however. Nassau Republicans did not do well at the polls. President Ford feil far short of the 100,000-vote plurality in the county that had been predicted by an exuberant Mr. Margiotta. Senator James L. Buckley lost the county. Even on the local level, Harold W. McConnell, the County Clerk, won re-election only by virtue of his vote on the Conservative Party line. Several other Republicans also had to rely on the Conservatives to win re-election.

Publicly, the first sign of a shift was Mr. Margiotta's appearance with Mr. Caso at a special meeting of Republican county committeemen in the Seaford area last month. It was to be the first of a series of such sessions designed, according to Margiotta aides, to provide an opportunity for Mr. Caso to mend fences with the G.O.R. workers or to see the depth of their resentment against him.

Mr. Caso saw it differently. He said Mr. Margiotta had telephoned him right after the election to discuss the upcoming County Executive campaign. "He felt we had to work together," said.

Mr. Dinne also saw it that way. He reacted by speeding up his timetable for an announcement of candidacy. He said publicly that he was "considering" a run for the nomination; privately he said his candidacy was a containty.

In a poker-like move, Mr. Margiotta reacted by canceling Mr. Caso's appearances at future G.O.P. meetings and declaring publicly his own neutrality. That signaled renewed trouble for Mr. Caso with his own party. Privately, Mr. Margiotta stepped up the pressure on Mr. Purcell to, in effect, "save" the party from Mr. Caso and Mr. Dunne.

Aides of Mr. Margiotta said that he had soured on Mr. Dunne because many party officials objected to the Senator's frequent independent-of-party stance in the past. Mr. Dunne says he has no idea why Mr. Margiotta switched, at least judging by his signals, from Mr. Dunne to Mr. Caso and finally to Mr. Purcell.

Mr. Purcell changed his mind about running, although as late as last month at a dinner party at Mr. Dunne's Garden City home, he had told Mr. Dunne that he was sticking to his retirement plans.

Why did Mr. Purcell change his mind? He conceded pressure from Mr. Margiotta and other Republicans. He also said in an interview in his office in Hempstead Town Hall—that he woold not directly oppose Mr. Caso in a two-way contest—although he said that "there has been no love lost between us." But he added that he felt, free to do so once Mr. Dunne entered the fray-

Finally, Mr. Purcell said he had come to the conclusion, after talks with rankand-file Republicans as well as with party leaders, that "Caso cannot be reelected."

In any event, Mr. Purcell said he might be available for a draft.

Mr. Margiotta, meanwhile, started sending out new signals. Mr. Purcell was prominent at his table at a charity dinner a few weeks ago and Mr. Caso, who was at another table, was ignored by the county chairman. The leader-ship-watchers in the Nassau County-G.O.P. got the message.

So did Mr. Dunne. He countered by formally announcing his candidacy, to show present and prospective supporters that he had not been scared off by the Purcell-Margiotta alliance.

With Mr. Dunne picking up strength, Mr. Purcell moved to counter him by changing his draft availability to a full-fledged candidacy, while Mr. Margiotta, who had earlier said he would not make a choice among the candidates until sometime next year, added his imprimatur to the Purcell candidacy. "Et th Brute?" was Mr. Caso's classic response to the Purcell announcement.

At the same time, Mr. Margiotta began trying to undermine Mr. Caso by confidently predicting to various politicians that the County Executive would bow out and accept a State Supreme Court judgeship. "I think Ralph would make a good Supreme Court justice." said Mr. Purcell with a straight-

Mr. Caso didn't think so. "I would not prostitute myself," he said at his Mineota office as he reiterated that he indeed would seek the Republican nomination for County Executive. At one point he and his wife, Grace, had to fight back tears as he recounted how Mr. Margiotta had turned on him. Despite the trappings of office around them, the Casos seemed a lonely couple.

However, Mr. Caso also changed his tune somewhat. Gone were the threats of a "hloodbath" and a run for County Executive as an independent in the general election if he lost the Republican primary. That threat had only increased the alienation of many Republican Party workers who believe that party loyalty demands that a candidate ahide by the primary results. Mr. Caso repeatedly refused to say what he would do if he lost the primary, or even to acknowledge that he had apparently changed his position.

All the candidates vow they are in the primary fight until the end. But judging by some of the reverse fields and fancy footwork of the last few weeks, an observer is entitled to some doubts. More on that next week.

Last May, in a final report to the Federal Highway Administration after a two year study of RTOR, the engiocering firm of Alan M. Voorhees & ... Associates commented:

"The most negative aspect of permitting the right turn on red is the safety." hazard it may present if the RTOR without stopping and yielding. Collisions with other vehicles or pedestrians could occur.

"To quantify this problem, RTOR accident experience in four cities-Dallas, Denver, Chicago and Los Angeles-and in two states, Colorado and Virginia, was analyzed.

Also, they say, pedestrians must be more alert than ever when crossing, not only for cars turning on green, but also for cars turning on red. For instance; the driver's view may be obstructed (a big truck may be in the next lane.) Drivers must be certain there are no pedestrians in the crosswalk before turning right oo red.

As far as Nassau County is concerned, Mr. Streb said: "We immediately had to go out and survey all our traffic signals. We have 1,250 traffic signals that the county owns. Each signal bas an average of 3.5 approaches to it. We had to look at the average direction the signal was approached from. So it ended up that we had to make about 4,200 surveys. And we completed 4,200 surveys, using every available person in this division to do it. It took 10 or 12 traffic engioeers

"I began it probably around the middle of September. The survey was to determine where we thought no-turnon-red signs would oeed to be installed, and the result of that survey was work orders for signs to be installed. We ended up with about 860 signs that need to go up."

Mr. Streb said be expected the signs to be in place by Jan. I. "That doesn't mean our studies will end," he said, indicating that revisions in sign placement or additional placements might

Before us everyone was afraid to invest out here, they thought they couldn't compete with the Manhattan mystique." he said. "We proved that there are sophisticated people out here who want and need such a place." Mr. Schrager talks of "a social strata" in the disco world, with disco clothes, a disco décor and disco people. "Long Island is ripe for it," he said.

Mr. Schrager said that he was planning to represent the said.

Mr. Schrager said that he was planning to open another disco in Oakdale, in Suffolk County, early in in the new year. He also said he had heard of six of seven new discos "in the works" for Nassau and Suffolk.

To Mr. Schrager, discothèques are not just places to meet someooe. "Going to a disco is an end in itself," he said.

If I just wanted to run a singles place I would put in a round 90-foot bar where peopla could meet, but the Enchanted Garden is noore than that."

"It is a little like the shopping-center phenomenom," Mr. Schrager added.
"There was a time when people on Long Island would have to go to 34th Street to shop at Macy's. But now there are shopping centers all over Long Island and in some respects they are better stocked than the ones in Manhattan."

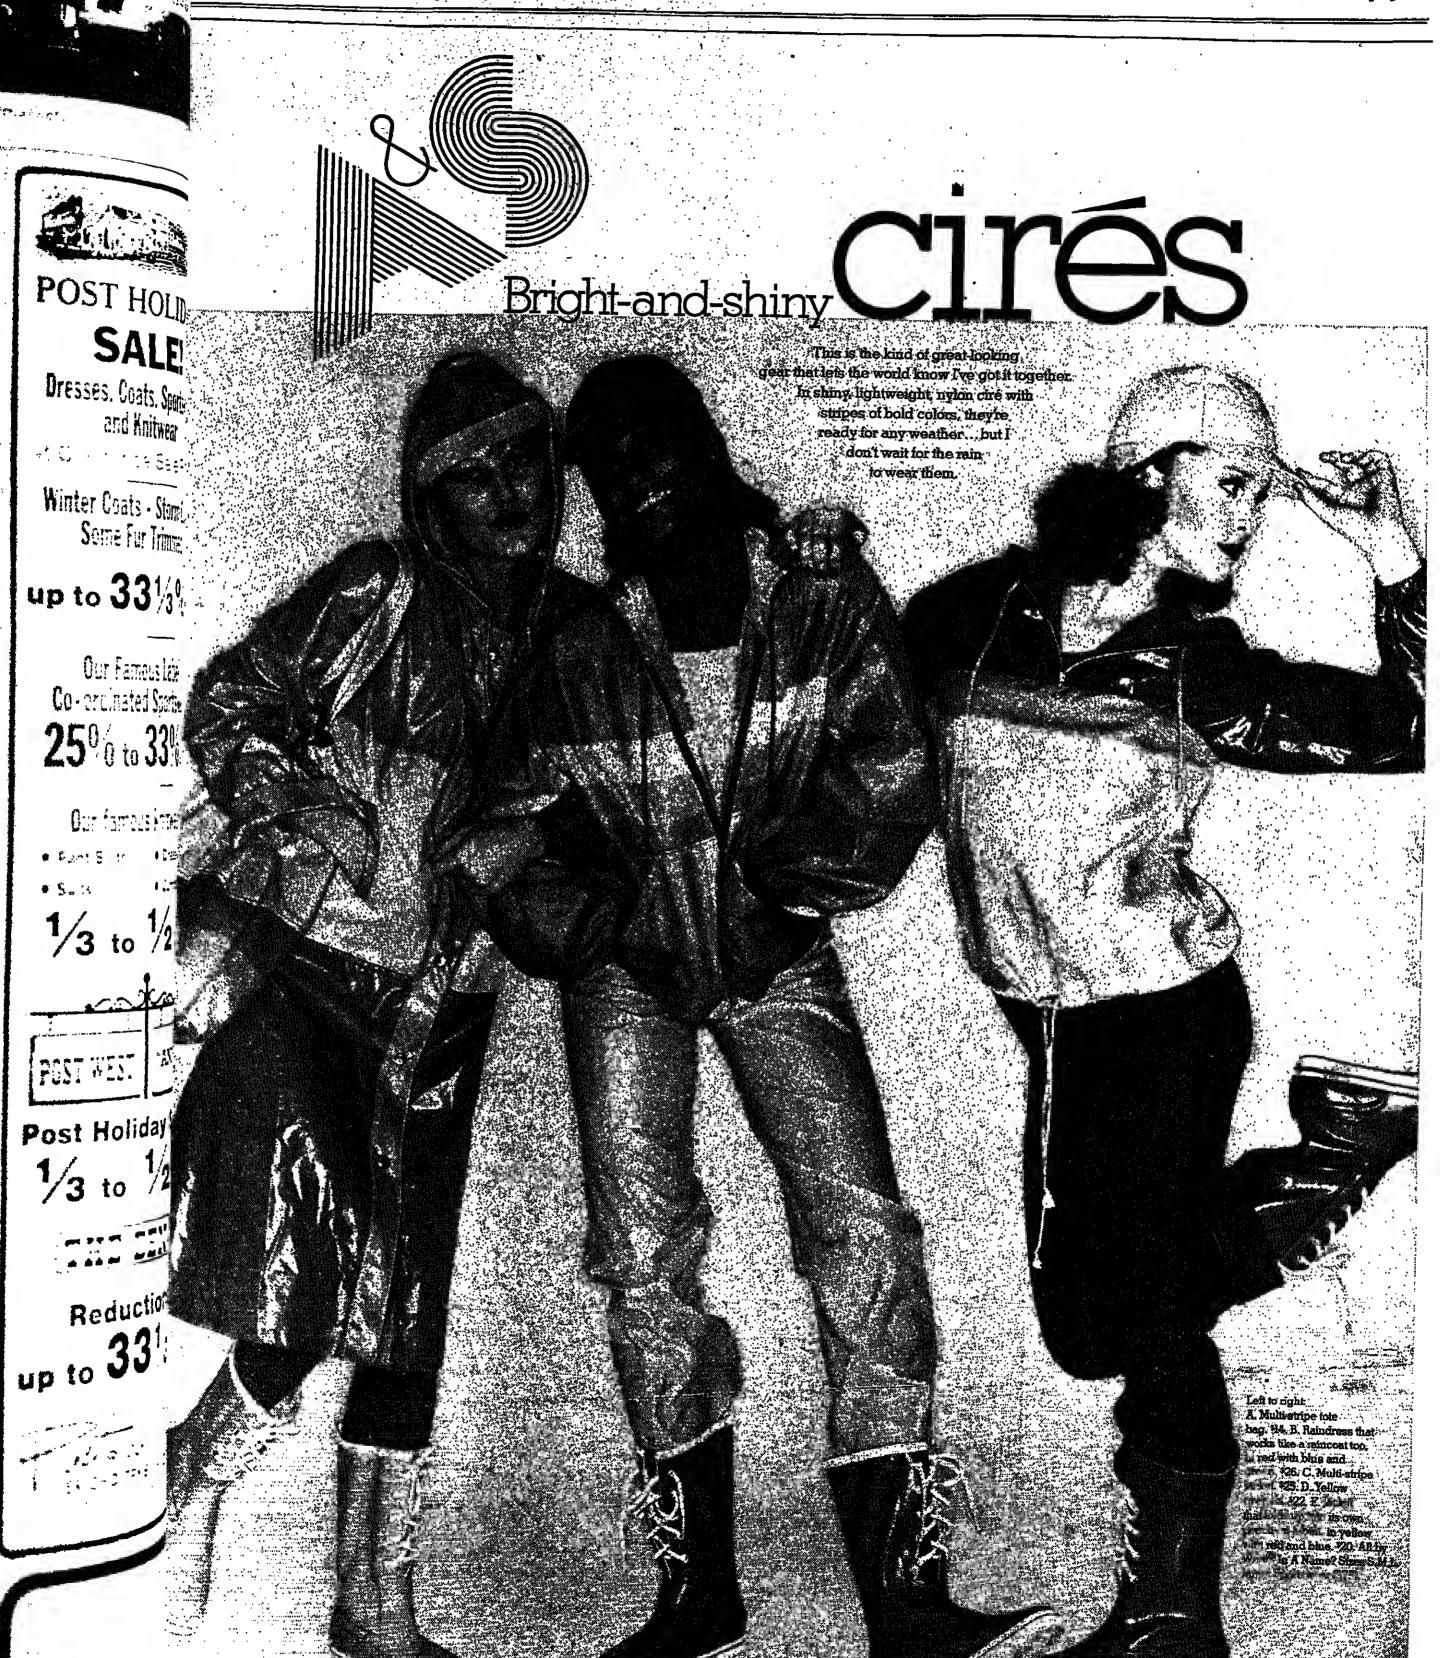

At Penrods, in East Meadow, there is a huge circular bar that overshadows the dance floor. Jerry Worth, one of the owners, acknowledges that the place is a singles club. "The service we're offering is boy meets girl," he said. Mr. Worth realizes that when his clientele is successful in that objective, he often loses them as customers, but he is not worried about running out of young people. Like many other discos, Penrods does its best to keep the customers coming in by offering free hustla lessons one or two nights

Another feature that many discos on the Island have in common is that they are in shopping malls. The advantage of that is the huge parking area, but the presence of the discos has created a strange, nocturnal life at many of the shopping centers of suburbia.

The parking lots also provide a quick getaway for those who tire of one place and want to check out another. With Continued on Following Page

OPEN TODAY, SUNDAY DECEMBER 26 AND NEW YEARS DAY from 12-5 PM DAILY from 10 AM-9 PM

OUR EXPERTISE IN ORIENTAL CARPETS dates back to 1889 and we are proud to have a long-time reputation for honest selling in this field -- where, unfortunately, some cynics feel the watchword should be Buyer Beware! For this sensational Holiday Event, we have assembled the finest quality handmade carpets from the exotic rug capitals of Iran, India, Pakislan, China — a bountiful array of the ultimate in master rug weaver's art. You will also find a huge selection of luxurious authentic Oriental designs in famous maker area rugs at savings as high as 51%. No wonder so many professional interior designers now make our fabulous Oriental Bazaar their first—and only—stop when shopping for their clients. They know our collection is tremendous and diverse enough for any decor. And that our credo: "We will not be undersold!" guarantees that the carpet bought today will be a great art investment for many New Years to come.

At Copperfield's the other night, the bonocer at the door turned away two young couples because the women were wearing dungarees. Inside the club, however, several of the patrons as well as three members of the fivepiece band were in blue jeans.

Part of controlling the door is admitting people who would be likely to spend more money at the bar, since many of the discos have no cover charge or ony a minimal cover.

Owners of the discos say that firm control at the front door does not mean excluding blacks or other ethnic groups, a practice that would clearly be illegal.

But one customer at Chaz, who is from East Meadow and could have gooe to a disco in the city as easily as he came to Huntingtoo, said he choae to go east because he wanted to avoid the minority groups that frequent many New York clubs.

At the Decameron, Paul Petrone, the Che New York Simes manager, said that the disco-restaurant America's biggest and est-read vacation guide. was trying to attract Island people who would otherwise travel to the city for a night out. Next to the heart-shaped of the aptly-named Long Island Appropriate Technology Group. "You've heard of communes where people have come together and rejected the way society was heading. The environmentalists many years ago were warning that we were coming to a time when our resources would run out and so

It is that word—"alternatives"—that more than any other typifies the volun-teer, private efforts of the fledgling organization that was pulled together last year by Mr. Ahrens, a consultant to the federally-run Community Services Administration; James A. Lippke, editor of Broadcast, Management/Engineering Magazine, and Robert Ralph,

Basing their efforts on the belief that technology must be "simple, easily comprehended, inexpensive relative to our present dominant technology, people-intensive and ecologically sound," the three Suffolk County residents first began their work together 20 months

"We were very much impressed by E. F. Schumacher's 'Small Is Beautiful,' subtitled 'Economics as if People Mattered." recalled Mr. Lippke who, like Mr. Ahrens, lives io Huotington but works in New York City. "That was kind of an exciting book."

ing the way society is going now.
'The leadership in our towns and counties isn't moving fast enough. We don't see bike lanes being developed to get away from using cars. We don't see conservation being used on ballfields when the lights are left on even when there's no one around. Long Island is a big boating area and we see these big gas hogs polluting up the bay

when people could turn to sail very

Specifically, he declared, efforts could also be directed toward localizing many industries, from those making bread to others preparing such delicacies as clam chowder ("We have potatoes and clams out here, so why not make the chowder here too?" he asked.).

"When energy was cheap, you could transfer goods quite simply," explained Mr. Ahrens, whose work as an engineer and builder keeps him in close contact with working-class families io the metropolitan area. "One study talks about the fact that by 1980 we'll need more hakeries to feed the country with a reduced labor force. This is where industry will go because they have to make a profit.

"What is oot put into the equation is how many people are oo longer io a job because the bread no longer is made locally. Also, you're wasting energy to transport this hread and its raw ingredients from different parts of the country. Why should thousands of people have to travel to New York or elsewhere when they could be working right on the Island?"

That question and others are part of the buge and complicated puzzle members of the local A.T. organization hope to answer in the mooths and years to come. The task is a challenging one.

Among the categories the group has decided are open to improvement are transportation, private and community heating and energy consumption, food farming and buying, recreation, waste-management and recycling, ecology, industrial economic development, educa-tion and personal life styles.

"Right now it's too early to deal with large corporations," said Mr. Lippke. If we follow the working model of other groups like ours, we'll continue to try to include iodividuals from small businesses and small iodustry, academiciaos and active involved citizens. I'm optimistic."

"I'm optimistic too," said Mr. Ahrens, "and I don't feel that it oecessarily has to be a great success overnight or among a large number of people, I have a solar collector on my roof-it saved me $75 io electricity hills over a three-month period last year-we live in a small house, have a small car and live the way we feel.

'I would suggest to people to do something, to begin. Doo't wait for the year 2000. We have got to begin now."

The Goalie's in First Grade

By FRANK BIANCO

D DROESCH admits that his first love was baseball, but the romance quickly cooled when be began to play hockey. "There is nothing like it-take away anything but not my hockey," says the 17-year-old Syosset athlete. Threatened with losing hockey privileges two years ago. he improved his school grades to a B average in one term and bas kept it there since.

Ed Droesch may well mirror the passions of more than 12,000 boys (and some girls as well) aged 6 to 60, who are involved in hockey on Long Island. The sport's 6-year age minimum and year-round schedule of clinics, leagues and summer camps lets participants' start younger and play longer than any other organized sport. And the ice is open to anyone who is interested.

"If they can make it across the rinks without their mothers, we'll take them," said Bill Millner, who acts as commissioner for the Town of Oyster Bay program and that of the Long Island Hockey League.

"It's a natural for the kids," he said. 'They start so young, everybody's on

'They play indoors, where there's no mud, sunstroke, rain, season or time of day. Best of all, we take them from zero ability and teach them everything they have to know."

Brief observation of a training session confirms Mr. Miliner's assessment. The hockey player's skills are dissected and improved in drills for each aspiring player. The timest players display a determination exceeded only hy their embarrassment when they slip on the path to proficiency.

They circle pylons on one edge of a skate blade, jump while skating full tilt and skate backwards the rink's length. Coaches and instructors stand close by, urging, commanding, demonstrating technique and giving individual instruction where necessary. Probably few teachers enjoy such undivided attention and wholehearted effort.

Off the ice, Curt is all first-grade shyess, tucking his head when asked whether he'd like to play like his hero, the goalie of the Detroit Red Wings, Ed Giacomin.

Two years in the program tells. Eight-year-olds skate with a fluidity and confidence that would be impres sive even without contrast with hegin-

"Even though they might look good, we don't expose them to the pressure competition until they've got the basics down," said Mr. Millner. "We've incubated many of the kids, restricting their participation to clinics, unless they were big for their age or exceptionally talented."

Professionals play for three 20-minute periods; these young aspirants play for three periods that range from 12 to 15 minutes. They rotate, five at a time, in two-minute shifts. Each team has two goalies, the only players who might remain in for the entire game.

The idea is to get the players to know each other so they'll work as a unit," Mr. Milner said. "After a while they know each other's moves and speed and can position themselves in anticipation of a play."

Emphasis is on technique and skill. A player who fights is not only thrown out of that game, but is also out of the next as well. A second fight warrants a two-game suspension and a third is punished by suspension for the rest of the season.

Players are generally divided hy age into four categories: mite-squirts, 6 to years old; peewees, 9 to 11; bentams, 12 to 14; midgets, 15 to 17 years old. . The basic program assigns the largest number of its players to teams in a 'house" league. Such players, graded by ability and experience, are guaranteed equal playing time. The best players often get additional play on the program's all-star squad, a status for which all can compete. Each program in an association fields an all-star squad. Twenty-nine Nassau and Suffolk high schools also have club hockey

tion fee that varies from $30 in C Bay's program to $150 for boys 10 in Islander Youth Hockey, Boys 10 pay $25 more.

Registration entitles the plays one night's practice and one game week for a 24-week period. A players get an extra night's po each week for which they mus an additional $25.

Equipment raises the indivi expense still higher. Warren Ec. former semipro hockey player owner of the Syosset Sports C specializes in hockey equipment serves the needs of the profes Islanders team.

used to arrange the flowers from the garden outside. All the ceilings in the house are low, and if tall visitors don't duck while going through doors, they are likely to cut their foreheads on the door frames. Doors seem to close unevenly and floors slant off in many directions. "There is not one straight line in this whole house," Mrs. Perutz said the other day to a visitor.

In the living room, where the walls are covered with white linen, there are oriental rugs and antique furniture and a fireplace bordered with blue and white tiles from Hulland.

One of the most charming places in the house is its original room, which is filled with treasures from all over the world. The wooden table is from Soain, the chairs around it from Switzerland and an ornate Austrian peasant wardrobe stands in the corner. Rumanian and German paintings hang on the walls, and in front of the fireplace are Spanish stools-

When one stands in the middle of this dark little room, by the fireplace, and looks, out the window at the hill gently sloping up toward the road and the town, one gets a powerful sense of the Isolation that John Woolley and his wife lived with 300 years ago. It was simply them and the cove, which at that time-according to old maps and for reasons known only to the people of the place-was known as Madman's Neck.

Even now, Locust Cove Lane seems miles away in time. Several years ago, when Mrs. Perutz's maid was alone in the house, a snowstorm knocked out the power lines. For three days she lived hy candlelight and never saw or

Will Oil and Suffolk Mix?

Caso, the Nassau County Executive. announced he would begin talks with the oil companies as a contingency measure should the suit lose in court.

Oo Tuesday, the County Legislature followed suit and agreed, over Mr. Klein's strenuous objections, to set up an Offshore Oil Drilling Oversight Committee that would prepare the environmental and financial ground for the county in case the suit is lost.

At the same time, the Legislature reaffirmed its geoeral opposition to offshore oil drilling by re-endorsing resolutions of 1971 and 1973 that first put Suffolk on record against oil exploratioo and then authorized Mr. Klein to undertake the suit.

"What we're about to engage upon," said Floyd M. Linton, Presiding Officer of the Legislature, after the vote, "is a process of cootingency planning."

Any defeosive quality to his explanatioo was clearly due to County Executive Klelo's efforts to paint the Legislature's 15-to-3 vote on the issue as a capitulation to Big Oil and to the Department of the loterior, which is seekiog the offshore oil exploratioos. Abandoned by Governor Carey when the state pulled out of the suit, having watched Mr, Caso and now the County Legislature appear to be cozying up to the enemy and having vowed to fight offshore oil "even if I'm the last one left standiog." Mr. Klein ohviously feels beset on all sides, as his response to the vote made clear.

Mr. Caso, he said, had 'no right" to undertake his independent démarche with the oil companies in proposiog talks before the suit was settled. The County Legislature, several of whose members traveled to Mineola to endorse Mr. Caso's move before Tuesday's vote, had in his words "directly prejudiced". Suffolk's position in the suit. And worst of all from the legislators' point of view, Mr. Klein asserted that the lure of "illusory" oil revenues had driveo the lawmakers to "sell the hirthright of this county."

Dr. Martin J. Feldmao, a county legislator from Dix Hills who led the group to see Mr. Caso and was a prime mover in Tuesday'a resolution, countered by pointing a Churchill quote on fanaticism at Mr. Klein; Mr. Lintoo suggested that the County Executive was trailing a "red herring" across the path of the offshore-oil dehate by charging the Legislature with headlong greed. In politics, this much smoke does not necessarily mean there is any fire, and the underlying political aspect of the cootroversy seemed outweighted last week by two deeply held and so far irreconcilable points of view.

The Legislature's vote was analogous to the oewly unified Democratic majority's action earlier this year in establishing its own office of budget review to analyze Mr. Kleio's hudget proposals. That decisloo also drew some fire from the County Executive, hut Mr. Linton insisted that it was a normal part of the Legislature's desire to play a greater and more active role in county matters-matters that the County Executive up until theo had domioated:

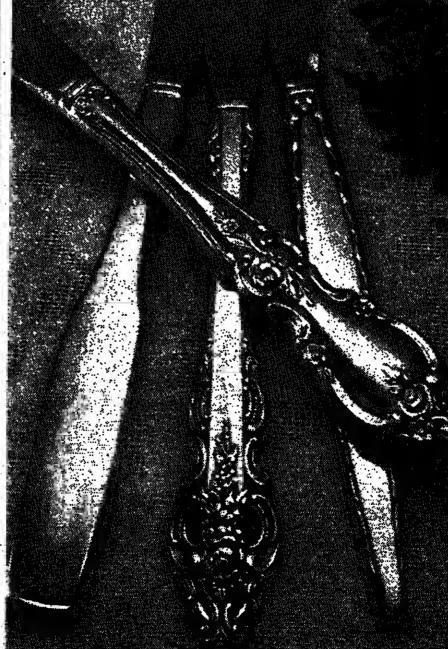

Similarly, Mr. Lintoo belie the Legislature should be me in setting policy oo the o iseue, even though Mr. Klein that this interference has set ty's course at cross purposes.

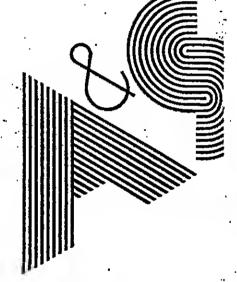

Beyond this, the issue is. The Interior Department nounced a study of explorator sites as close as 15 miles fro lan's beaches.

Whether any direct oil rev. the county would result from nearby is still unsettled in a ple's minds, and although seems to trust the oil compa legislators appear to agree the with that much mooey ar should be entirely ignored.

Mexico's Gift to the Holiday Season

By CARL TOTEMEIER

HE Christmas seasoo will be over all too soon, and then will come the post-holiday doldrums. Yet many of us will have a bright reminder of the joys of Christ-mas for months to come—the speciacular Christmas poinsettia.

It was first associated with Christmas in its native Mexico. The ancient Aztecs cultivated it, and their kings used it in their ceremonies as a symbol of purity centuries before the arrival of the Spanish. In the 17th century the Franciscan priests who had settled in the Taxco region took note of its brilliance and observed that it flowered at Christmastime. They adopted it for use in the Fiesta of Santa Pesebre, the Nativity processioo.

It was first introduced in the United States by Joel Poinsett, the United States Ambassador to Mexico, io 1825. He grew it in his greenhouses in South Carolina and eventually distributed it to his horticultural friends, including John Bartrant, the famed Philadelphia plant explorer. In time it was given the commonly accepted name of poin-settia in honor of Mr. Poinsett, al-though elsewhere in the world it is known hy its scientific name, Euphor-bia pulcherrima spread acceptance in the United States until the early 1900's, when a Swiss immigrant named Albert Ecke began to grow it in quantity in Southern California. At one time his fields were in what is now the center of Hollywood.

Through his efforts and as the result of the advent of modern transportation, the poinsettia achieved widespread distribution and acceptance as the Christmas plant. The Ecke family is still the major source of poinsettias in the Unit-ed States and in other countries.

The poinsettia of 25 years ago was as strikingly beautiful as those of today. It was available in the predominant red color and to a lesser degree tissue paper before delivery. It was sen-its leaves and bracts. It also wanted to go dormant as soon as it had flowered, often leading to leaf and bract drop before the Christmas season was over. You never found these poinsettias on sale in supermarkets or in depart-ment stores. They had to have optimum conditions. In the mid-1950's a revolution of sorts began to take place when several breeders began to work with the poin-settia. The results were plants that withstood relatively poor handling and less than ideal conditions and would last for months in the home. The modern poinsettis had arrived.

Leftover Paint

cold air entering.

When storing partly empty cans ofpaint, tha big problem the homeowner or apartment dweller encounters is heavy skinning over of the paint that remains. One way to provent this is to carefully float a small amount of thinners on top of the paint just before replacing the cover. Use water for latex paint, and turpentine or similar thinner for solvent-thinned paints. Run the thinner slowly down the flat side of a paint paddie held inside the can so the tiquid flows out over the surface without mixing in. Then replace the cover tightly to make an airtight seal and put the can away carefully without shaking or tipping it.

Smooth Floor

In order for a resilient tile floor to come out smooth and even, the tile must be laid over a firm surface that is also smooth and even. When tiles are being laid on a concrete slah such as a basement or enclosed porch, smoothing of high spots and bumps can be accomplished by chipping away at the high spots with a hammer and an old cold chisel. Low spots, on the other hand, must be fuled in, but ordinary patching cement or mortar usually cannot be used because it will not stick in thin layers. Instead, use of one of the various tatex-cement combinations that are sold for this purpose by floor-covering dealers, as well as by many hardware stores. These can be applied with a plasterer's trowel in very thin leyers, and they mix to a smooth consistency (liquid latex and powdered cemant) that spreads easily, much like ordinary spackling compound

Questions and Answers

Q: My builder told me the outside of my house is covered with cedar shakes and he said I should do nothing to them. The house has a mansard roof and water runs down off this along the face of the cedar to the gutter which is below the shakes. This has caused the front of the house to develop a dark, greenish, mildew-type color. Is there anything I can do to correct this?—R.J.K., West Orange,

A It seems to me, without having seen your house, that the gutter could be moved higher up to catch the water off the roof before it gets to the cedar. If the darkening is just dirt, it is doing no serious harm-other than cosmetic. However, if it is mildew, then it should not be neglected. The mildew can be washed off with a solution of one part Clorox and three parts water, then rinsed clean. I would also suggest creating the shingles in the spring with a clear preservative.

Q: Is it possible to do something about stairs that make a creaking noise when people go up and down them? I assume it is caused by the wood being very dry.—Mrs. L.M., Bloom-field, N. J.

A: I doubt if the trouble is caused by the wood being dry. Nine times out of ten, when stairs creak or squeak it is because the treads are slightly loose, or have buckled up from the risers on which they rest. In some cases, it is also caused by the treads rubbing against the stringers on each side (the stringers are the wide sloping boards that run up each side thet support tha ends of the treads). The way to cure this permanently is to find the offending treads or boards by having someone step oo each one as you bend down to watch for movement and listen for where the sound comes from. Then drive angled nails or screws in to secure the loose members. Countersink these to hide the heads, then fill the hole that remains with a little wood plastic or putty.

Q: I want to paint my bathroom walls, which are now covered with wallpaper. I find scraping off the old paper an almost impossible job. Can you please tell me what is the easiest way to atrip off the old wallpaper?-C.M., Westhampton Beach.

A: The easiest way by far is to rent a wallpaper steamer from your local paint or hardware store, or from a tool-rental agency in your area. As pictured here, these machines send steam through a hose to a large perforated plate that you bold against the wall. The steam penetrates and softens the paper and the paste that holds it, so that you can then scrape the paper off easily with a wide putty

A Celebration of The Protean Print

By DAVID L. SHIREY

COLD SPRING HARBOR VERYONE has a right to his preferences in art as in other things, and these are clearly stated in an ambitious graphics show at the Harbor Gallery. Amidst 400 or so prints on the walls and in cases, mnre than 30 artists are represerited, but the scales strongly tip in favor of artists such as James McNeill Whistler, Arthur B. Davies and John Sloan.

Who could complain about such favoritism, especially when it is directed toward a Whistler or a Sloan, although there might he some justifiable grounds for doubts about Davies. I am part of the Whistler cult, and for me, he can do little wrong. I have long ago abandoned attempts to be objective about his worth and bave resigned myself to his magic and charm.

In this show Whistler, as always, unfailingly does his stuff. He shows us that he is as versatile as he is theatricall, knowledgeable, talented and blessed with the visinn of other Olympians. Whether he is outlining the lineaments of the sitter, characterizing a landscape or seascape, or doing a woebegone interior or a dancing girl, Whistler seizes the essential and he does it with an unparalleled grace and aristocratic imperturbability.

He can ennoble the lowliest subject, give dignity to the undignified, exulting in virtually any subject matter. Perhaps more than any other American artist except Sargent, Whistler gave class to American art without Isolating It from the people. His art can he admired for a full command of its resources, feeling and behavior, for its self-possession, presence of mind and its poise, but it is still vitally accessible to all.

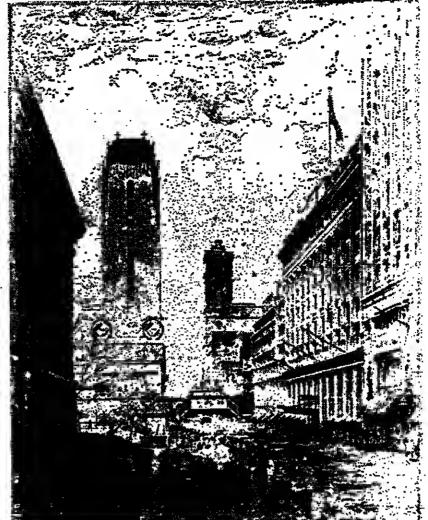

Sloan, on the other other hand, although be was attracted like Whistler to the life around him, did little to raise artistically the station of his subject matter. Somehow it always remained what it was, never succeeding to more romantic, perhaps idealized interpretation. If there was mountonous routine in New York apartments, or grime in the aubway or poverty in the streets, they were translated in Sloan's art into routine grime and poverty. But we are at one with Sloan's scenes, made to experience with his people their plight. Sloan also had his merrier side and some of his pictorial chnices illustrate the hrightness of city life in the early decades of this century. If Whistler gave class to art, Sloan made it classless, and both were major contributions.

But this exhibition is more than a showcase for these two artists. It is a joyons grab bag of many different artists from different periods, not riveting us with a prevailing theme or silently exhorting us to find a telltale link hetween all of the examples.

If there are any links, they are simple as the medium the print and its endless possibilities. We can stand in wonder before the flexibility of expression that artists can wrest from lithographs, etchings, drypoints and aquatints. A show like this is unassailable proof that prints can yield as many properties to the artist as paint or stone or bronze. The other link is that the works are primarily representational, but the types of figurations are so markedly different that such a classification is

One of the most nutstanding representations of the representationalists, if such a thing can be said, is the work nf John Taylor Arms, an etcher who crisply delineated the facades of churches and other buildings in England, Italy and New York City. His art makes an ideal anticipation for the steak tomato and onion salads are also listed on the menu for an extra charge, but experience has taught me to avoid tomatoes after Nov. 1. The garlic bread was salty and charred from reheating. The French fries and home fries, made on the premises, were undercooked and greasy.

I am convinced the people running this restaurant have not bothered to sample the food. How else could one explain the sauces? Garlic sauce for the steak consists of melted butter with a strong dose of chopped raw gardic. It may not keep you from catching cold, but it will keep you from enjoying your steak. Fresh broccoli, limp from overcooking, is offered with cheese sauce or hollandaise. I ordered the hollandaise; it was a blob of soapy tasting yellow material served ice cold. The problem was obviously not one of temperature, but I did ask the waiter why it was so cold. The standard response in this situation, which I have encountered on previous occasions, seems to be that the eggs would curdle. That is sheer consense. Egg-york emulsion sauces such as hollandaise and béarnaise, wheo properly prepared, will be pleasantly warm and satiny.

Ordinary cheesecake and peach Melba (canned peaches, canned whipped cream) complemented the meal perfectly.

The restaurant occupies the premises of a former Heads and Tails steakhouse. Brick walls, rustic beams and dark woods give it a cozy, comfortable atmosphere. Something e trifle more gracious than paper placemats should have been used for table settings. The tables are butcher blocks and hatch covers, the latter so heavily coated with a plastic serts (some included, others extra)—thet are almaking them seem totally synthetic.

The menu is à la carte, with appetizers $1 to $3.75, entrees (some fish and seafood dishes as well as steaks) $3.95 to $8.95. The only dinner I could recommend consists of a cocktail or a stein of beer; a steak; the onion rings and coffee, which should average $12 a person, including tax and tip. Credit cards are accepted. T-Bone Steak Parlour is open for dinner starting at 4 P.M. every day except Tuesday. After 10 P.M. they also serve bamburgers and steak sandwiches.

Reflections on Suffolk History

By CHRISTOPHER R. VAGTS

BOUT 10,000 years ago the first burner beings came to the land we call Suffolk. They were nomadic bunters who followed the caribou herds to this area. The land then had many similarities to our own terrain. Our hills existed then. Where we have flat areas, it was flat then. But the vegetation was that of a tundra and the weather was colder—the edge of the receding continental glacier was just a few bundred miles to the north.

Because so much water was still in the form of glacial ice, the level of the sea was substantially lower and the shoreline was quite different. For example the area now covered by Long Island Sound was low-lying meadow and marshland, with a river the only water dividing what we now call Connecticut from Suffolk. The hunters crossed on foot following the caribou

With the passing of time and the warming of this part the earth, the glacier receded northward. By 5,000 years ago-about the time the first kingdoms of Egypt were forming—the people bere were living in rather mobile settlements shifting seasonally-inland in the winter, llving in wigwams of wood and bark, and near the shore in the summer for fishing. We may see parallels in our summer migrations to the sbore.

By 2000 B.C.—when the Minoan civilization on Crete was building elaborate palaces with inside plumbingthe inhabitants of our area had developed a taste for shellfish-clams, scallops, oysters. This too is one of our ties to the past,

A millennium later there were more people and more woodlands and clay was being worked into pots for cooking. The bow and arrow had replaced the throwing stick and an agriculture of beans and maize was taking hold. The tradition of farming begun in that time extends to our own day even if you have to go out east

Though there were tribal frictions, the life was generally peaceful. The best known export just before the coming of the Europeans was wampum, the white and purple beads made from local shells. Wampum was important in the culture as a ceremonial token at all major events and undertakings. Later it was turned into a monetary system by the Dutch and English as a standard for trading transactions.

My point is that before the arrival of the first European explorers and settlers in these parts, there was a historical and cultural tradition of over 9,000 years. And while our information of this period is relatively sparse, we ought to consider this in our pursuit of local history.

I say this because in looking at historical groups and societies around Suffolk County, I find a great preponderance of effort is focused on the early settlement and colonial period, which is hut 125 years or so-from the middle of the 17th century until the Declaration of

That time is important, of course, but we might bear in mind as we pursue our preservation efforts that the relics of the presettlement days are at least in the same state of jeopardy as are the fine old colonial buildings we are fighting to preserve. Indeed, prehistoric sites, being less visible, may be in greater danger from the bulldozer.

It should be mentioned here that Suffolk County was formally established in 1683. This is just a reminder to anyone suffering from "Bicentennial exhaustion." It only seven years to our county's Tricentennial!

Most Suffolk County historical societies, as I bave indicated, are concentrating their efforts on colonial-Revolutionary periods and the early 1800's. We can take pride not only in their dedication to the task, but also in the quality of the collection, restoration and preservation efforts. People of the period lived out their lives within a limited geographical sphere bounded by bome, farm and local town. So it is fitting that we present this period as we do-each town documenting and telling its own story.

If there are any years of this period worthy of greater attention, it is bow people here bore the occupation of the English King's forces after American troops were overwhelmed at the Battle of Long Island. It has been said that history is written by the winners, but we ought to remember the fiber of our people in defeat. There are lessons in forehearance and sacrifice, as glorious as any military victory, to be learned from this period in our

The early 1800's saw the isolation of this county end forever with the coming of the Long Island Rail Road. Its first rails touched Suffolk in 1841, The first train ran from Brooklyn to Greenport three years later on July 27, when the trip was made in three and a half bours with great fanfare and celebration.

The energy, violence, wheeling-dealing and turmoil involved in the railroad's establishment reflected in microscosm what was happening all across the nation as we moved from an agricultural society toward an industrial economy. The remnants of steam rallroading are still around, but they are disappearing. I hope that those who love railroading will seek to document and become involved in preserving this part of our heritage.

There is much more than locomotives, stations road men involved. There are stories of ferris and trolleys-and hotels like the old Stony Br Another fascinating aspect of the railroad the "station vs. village" attitude that devel still survives in Island towns such as Hunting Jefferson and others. We studied it in Huntin tion and were astounded at the lengths to w dents went just to avoid any community n implied proximity to the railroad depot-on e of the tracks. For years efforts were made to area Huntington Manor. The name didn't stick no one knew where it was.

The same thing happened in Port Jefferson when local residents named the area Echo "different," but it conveyed no real sense of was finally dropped. This battle of status ma visible, less vocal, today but it goes on with g with "village folks" still feeing superior to

By the turn of the century, and even before kind of document had become abundant-g photographs. If local historians will search thes will have a valuable resource to supplement paintings, sketches and written material No photographs shed light on the peak years of hometown, they also reflect the change taking Suffolk as more and more people were d through their motor-car touring that this wa place for summer vacations and a good place All this has a special appeal to residents tod are few better ways to present history to the public than by photographs of then and now.

Why Are We Poisoning Our Children? Equivocating on

By EDWARD R. WALSH

E Americans are losing the battle of the bulge. Overfed and underexercised, we pile on pounds are pore over a glut of diet books, seeking relief from overweight conditions. But we can't fool Mother Nature. The junk foods we ingest take their toll in bulging waistlines and needless doctor bills.

In 1972, the date of the last five-year Commerce Department census, consumers put away $2 million worth of between-meal snacks. In 1973, Americans consumed 125 pounds of sugar per capita, but only 109 pounds of beef. Sugar, once a treat, now poses a threat to bealth. It's the hidden ingrédient in most of our foods, even though it's claimed to be the most common cause of vitamin B and zinc deficiencies in

The road to nutritional ruin is paved with sweet intentions. An estimated total of two-thirds of our national sugar production is put into prepared products such as ketchup, pickles. onion dip, peanut butter, hiscuit mixes and chicken soup. A sampling of schoolchildren in one area disclosed that each was downing between 25 to 30 spoonfuls of raw sugar a day.

Enormous numbers of American suffer from disturbances of sugar level in the blood and its symptoms. What's more, this sweet life is rotting the teeth right out of our mouths. About 95 out of 100 people suffer from dentsl decay, reports the American Dental Association. Studies show that the average child who starts school has three decayed teeth. But by age 15, he has 11 decayed, extracted or filled teeth. In light of such evidence, why do we persist in over-sweetening ourselves to death?

Unbalacced meals, too much sugar and food additives may be among the culprits preventing students from concentrating on their work. That's what several nutritionists suggested to 250 parents attending a Nassau District P.T.A.-sponsored symposium at Long Beach High School in October. Dr. Ben. F. Feingold, a pediatrician, stated that additives, which are in 80 percent of all food, can cause such hyperactive behavior as restlessness, short attention span and compulsive aggression.

Why should schools allow nutritious hot lunches to be neglected in favor of cariogenic junk? Should taxpayers indirectly support such unfair competition, which undermines children's health? Why bother bolding bealth classes if students can step out in the corridor at any time and get a junk food fix that could make them sick.

Some schools no longer tolerate double standards, Last September, the sale of candy, chewing gum, soft drinks, ice bars and other items was banned by the West Virginia State Board of Education. Parents in Dallas; Bloomington, Ind.; Washington, and Greenburgh, N.Y., have also persuaded officials to rid cafeterias and vending units of nutritional garbage.

Until four years ago, local school boards were probibited from making junk foods available in New York State schools that have federally financed lunch programs. But in 1972, lobbyists managed to get the ban lifted. Since then bills to eliminate cariogenic foods from vending machines bave died in legislative committee.

Why can't something be done here on the Island? Something can and is. The P.T.A. symposium in Long Beach has helped galvanize local school leaders into action. In both Nassau and Suffolk, pilot programs have been operating with some success, P.T.A. directors report that many more parents' committees are meeting with school board trustees to consider nutritious alternatives on school lunch menus. Bellmore has removed all jnnk foods and products containing additives, and replaced them with such substitutes as Sunflower seeds and nuts.

Local P.T.A.'s, growing increasingly dissatisfied with the status quo, are more actively involved in revising school lunch programs, reports Gloria Landow, P.T.A. director of the Nassau district. "We're following up on this symposium; we won't let it die," she

In Suffolk as well, increasing concern has been voiced. School P.T.A. units in Northport, Harborfields, Smithtown, Hauppange, and East and West Islip have been busy recently expediting change in the lunchrooms. Middle Island's CRUNCH (Concerned Residents Upholding Nutritious Contribution to Health) also has spearheaded a grassroots effort that has produced results.

Despite inroads made by the pioneering efforts of some P.T.A.'s, some school districts are reluctant to abandon present policies. A number are adamant in refusing to junk food.

Why this hysteria over retaining nutritionally poor food? Are schools afraid of losing snack-food revenues that help fatten emaciated budgets? If so, let the fear be laid to rest. In Greenburgh, parents convinced the caterer. to stock nutritious substitutes, assuring him they'd sell well. They did. Similar success has been reported in Island

Such turnabouts should become commonplace. Continuing current policy is sheer hypocrisy. Selling non-nutritious stuff stamps a seal of approval on products that violate the schools' own teaching. Schools should be reducing nutritional illiteracy, already a national disgrace, by practice as well as by preachment. Let them focus on fosroom efforts and makes a mockery of puffed-up pronouncements to the public. Let's dump those cake, candy and cookie sales; let's rid our schools, recreation centers and other institutions that depend on tax dollars of all junk foods. Instead, substitute raisins, fruits and fruit juices, beef sticks, boiled eggs, cheese slices, milk, nuts and sunflower seeds. Let's start to conduct

providing facts about good eating. Tolerating junk foods vitiates class-

ALPH G. CASO, the Nassau County Executive, appears to have resigned himself to the inevitability of oil drilling off the Island while simultaneously continuing involvement in a lawsuit to block such plans and to nullify a $1.1 billion sale of drilling rights from the Island to Virginia.

This is one case where giving In one incb amounts to giving in. Along the East Coast, officials from New Jersey and Westchester County (and, in particular, Suffolk County Executive John V. N. #### To Silence the Aerial Din

By JOSEPH R. LEWIS

OISE: an unwanted discordant sound disturbing to the ear. According to the Department of Transportation, seven million Americans are subjected to noise caused by jet aircraft every day. The three-quarters of a million residents around Kennedy International Airport are jarred out of their normal routines as frequently as every 90 seconda, for hours on end, seven days a week, night

How devastating is the noise and bow can it be described to someone unfamiliar with it? A few analogies are in order.

Imagine two people conversing and raise their sound level 16 times, or the noise level of a vacuum cleaner raised eight times. Include an ear-piercing screech and whine and, at times, a low-frequency vibration. That's a subsonic jet taking off or landing and is what the people in the noise-impact area around J.F.K. are forced to endure. If the Concorde supersonic transport should be introduced into J.F.K., the noise levels will be 32 and 16 times respectively. While the screech and whine will not be present, the vibration level will be five times greater. The Concorde noise has been described as being like 100 subway trains entering a station at the same time.

A current report of the C.A.A. (the British equivalent of our F.A.A.) shows that at a distance of 18.5 miles from Heathrow, Concorde's home base, the noise is three times louder and lasts three times longer than any other aircraft flying.

With the present subsonics, our children's classroom work is constantly disrupted social and religious functions must give way to the planes, TV viewing is disturbed. There is abso-Intely no daily activity that escapes the disruptive influence of the jet aircraft: It's all-pervading. The present noiseimpact area is about eight miles wide; with the Concorde, it will extend about to answer. The majority of us were here before the jets intruded on us. We were here when J.F.K. was called Idlewild and bad only prop service. In fact, when the jets were introduced, the Port Authority, which operates Kennedy, told us there would be no night jet flights and only a few during the day.

Do we have to accept this abuse from the airlines? The answer is no! Technology has existed for a number of years to quiet the older, noisier planes, which are the worst offenders, but the airlines have fought the improvements and received cooperation from the Department of Transportation and the Federal Aviation Administration. These two agencies have thwarted the mandate of the Congress as expressed in the Aircraft Noise Abatement Act of 1968 (P.L. 90-411) and amended in 1972, through the bureaucratic process of countless studies,

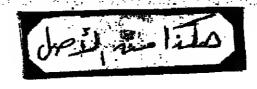

Many airports throughout the world have instituted curiews. Heathrow in Britain and National in Washington, D.C., to name just two. Basically a curfew does not allow aircraft that exceed a prescribed noise level to use the facilities between 11 P.M. and 7 A.M. Some airports, like Logan in Boston, have banned not only the noisier jets but also the Concorde S.S.T.

A night curfew at Kennedy Is the first and immediate step in an effective noise-abatement program. It can always be lifted after the airlines have instituted quieter operations through retrofit or replacement.

The Federal agencies' and airlines' long-time policy of benign neglect must be brought to an and. Until modern technology is applied to the old jets still in use, and they will still be around until the late 1990's-a night curfew at J.F.K. is a must of the highest priority.

Most time-honored of the queues is the line at the bank. The recent innovation of the roped single-line feed-offs has ended the painful gamble of being stuck behind the depositor with the week's receipts from the local deli, watching the rapidly dwindling lines to the right and left of you. Common sense and fair play-the democraticideal-has made line-waiting at the bank a dignified occupation. One would think it the best of all possible worlds : to deposit your dough. Another examof the queue.

Then somebody invented the drive in bank. On Long Island, it is as ubiquitous as the pizza parlor and the burger heaven. The old, massive columnar edifice of official finance has been replaced by a street corner coziness, money replacing candy, with sweetshop availability. The casual retailstore image reinforces the idea that the bank is just another place to stop and

Returnable Bottles Galled Boost to Jobs

In concluding that the throw-gway bottle system is the lesser of two evils, ["A Riddle in a Bottle," Long Island Opinion Page, Dec. 12], Assemblyman Perry B. Duryea Jr. incorrectly assumes that a returnable bottle system would eliminate jobs. Not so, says the Legislature's own State Senate Task Force on Critical Problems. In its report entitled No Deposit, No Return the task force concluded that a shift to returnables would result in a net increase of 4,000 johs within the state because of the labor-intensive nature of refillable bottle and handling operations. ...

In addition, the widespread introduction of plastic nonreturnable bottles in the New York market, despite the unresolved questions about the safety of the chemicals used in producing the new bottles, make a shift back to returnables more sensible than ever. ERIC A. GOLDSTEIN throws some questions at me which I must answer. Yes: I did live through the Holocaust. No. I did not witness the gassing and the crematoria of Auschwitz, But as a child of 10 living in a village in Nazi-occupied Poland, I witnessed the endless procession of wagons traveling in the same direction. The driver and the passengers were soldiers. From the wagons extended ropes to which were tied any number of "undesirable" humans that had been rounded up that day. Those who could not run were dragged. I felt sorrow, anguish, helplessness and, especially, anger that humans could do this to one anotherthe same feelings I have when I see women going into abortion houses to have their babies killed. Some of the "ropes" that drag them in are society-The Nazis were firm believers in the
